Mr. Peel to continue in his office, that he might be enabled to complete various beneficial measures, which his zealous inquiries into, and his intimate knowledge of the condition of the country, had suggested to him. We believe a similar honor was never before paid to any person filling that situation; we are sure, it was never so well deserved. In retiring now, he will carry with him the esteem and gratitude of the Nation he has so eminently befriended. His conciliatory manners, his vigorous mind, his assiduity, and his talents, peculiarly qualified him for that office, and will render him an important support to any department of the Government in which he may hereafter appear.
