The circumstances altogether were truly afflicting. This excellent Officer was highly and deservedly esteemed by all who knew him. About ten days since he was married at Guerasey, to a very young and very amiable lady, Miss Edwards, and had only returned there a few days, when be expired amongst the congrainlations of his friends. Early on Saturday morning the Major started from his bed, and ran to the window, complaining of a pain in his chest; his terrified wife hastened to his assistance just in time to receive him in her arms a breathless corpse. Her shrieks brought the attendants; medical aid was almost immediately procured, but in vain; his spirit was flown, never to return to the inanimate body, which she still held distractedly in her arms. Major Wall was in the 30th year of his age, and had every prespect before him of a long and prosperous life. By his former marriage he has left to lament his loss five children; his eldest a fine lad of 17, gone about a week ago to a school at Caen, in Normandy ; two daughters were in Ireland ; and two sons, one 12, and the other thirteen years of age, were with him when he died.
