the fostering care of the Ladies of this City, the destitute naked objects in the House of Industry have not been forgotten by them; not only have they generously contributed to clothe those poor sufferers, but they have attended at that invaluable institution to see their benevolent intentions carried into effect. We cannot conceive a more interesting scene than this to behold females of the first rank in our City, personally ministering to the wants of the poor; and we anxiously hope, that a Committee of Ladies, may, from henceforth, superintend and visit the House of Industry, and thereby insure to the inmates of it, and to the public at large, all the benefits it is capable of conferring on them—the good to be derived from such a Committee would be incalculable, especially where the superintendance of nearly seventy female children (chiefly orphans,) would devolve upon them.
