THEATRE.

...made their second appearance, and were represented, 'The Wonder' and 'Rosina.' Strength of character, and Mrs. CENTREVILLE's performance, render Mrs. CENTREVILLE's 'The Wonder' one of the most successful British Theatre can boast. It is a play of great worth, that the currency of a play, nor diminished its value in our estimation, as when it was first presented from the mint of genius, and after the rust of time—circulation, and various vicissitudes of taste which have interrupted its course, have not interrupted its excellence. Comedy was well performed by the Thespian— with the exception of the companies, none other, perhaps, in the Kingdom. 'The Wonder' (more justice, in our favourite part) was performed with great perfection—His natural and personate the impetuous lover of Rosina, and jealousy, he seemed to be a perfect actor from one to the other of these
