CASE OF GREAT DISTRESS.

At this season of the year, when the best feelings of the heart are directed to alleviate the wants of suffering humanity, the well disposed will surely sympathize with, and assist the daughter of a citizen, who moved, not many years since, in a respectable walk of life, in this City. She is now reduced to the lowest ebb of human misery—no means to support her for a day and her covering the shreds of former days; and what adds to the poignancy of her afflic-tion, is a highly cultivated mind. Such are the reverse of this life. Donations will be thankfully received by Mrs.
Keane, or at the Office of this Paper.
