DIED—At his house, Mount-Kennett, John Bold, Esq. for many years an eminent Apothecary of this City, who, by his talents and exemplary conduct, raised himself to the highest pinnacle of his profession; few men have departed this life more regretted; in him, to a strong and discriminating judgment, was combined all the softer affections of the heart; he discharged the duties of a husband, a parent, and friend, in the most praise-worthy manner; the impression of his many virtues must remain deeply rooted in the hearts of all who know him; affable and pleasing in his manners, he conciliated the friendship of every one; throughout the course of his life, he faithfully observed the Gospel precept of loving God, and doing to his neighbour as he would be done by; he had that felicity which is the lot of few to possess, the good word of every man, the ill of none; in fact, he performed all those duties that constitute a good Citizen, a good neighbour, and an honest man; as he lived universally beloved and esteemed, so he died lamented by all his family who were acquainted with his most excellent private virtues, he is an irreparable loss, but by the public in general, and those to whom his humanity extended, he will be deeply regretted and deplored—In Dublin, Thomas,
