

THE CHIEF BARON.
 list of business for discussion in the Commons on Monday, was the Name of the Commissioners of Inquiry into the State of Justice in Ireland. Mr. Rice, we are told, means to propose some Resolutions upon that part of the Report in which the Chief Baron, Right Hon. Standonish, is charged with having increased the fees of the Chief Baron. A letter on that subject from his Lordship to Mr. Gregory, Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, has been printed by order of the House of Commons. It enters into an explanation of all charges, and contends that he has done but what was perfectly justifiable by law. It is of great length, occupying 25 pages. The following is an extract:—
 It will be observed, that I have been obliged to make my observations beyond the receipt of the law, or the legality of them. I have been obliged to discuss the general conduct of the Lord Exchequer, in its distribution of time, general regulations, and in the management and dispatch of its business. My conduct is contrasted with that of my predecessor, in the several Courts of Chancery, King's Bench, and Common Pleas. I have entered into a comparison with reluctance, and have not gone a point further in it than I was compelled to go. I have candidly given all the information which it was in my power to supply, and did so already upon my examination, as far as the Commissioners thought proper to require of me. I have explained my acts, and stated my motives. I have endured this without once stopping to inquire, whether it was a general review, either of myself, or of the Court in which I have the honour to preside, within the intention of those under whose authority the Commissioners were appointed, or beyond the scope and authority of the Commission under which they have acted.
 It is intended by them to contrast my abilities or learning, either with the living or the dead, of whom mention has been made, I must do so with unfeigned humility from the copiousness of my talents; but if it extends no farther than attention to fidelity in the discharge of public duties, disinterested zeal, for the benefit of the country, and the good of his people, it is but just to avow, that I feel, in the consciousness of the purity of my own heart, sufficient to uphold me against any imputations which may be cast upon a man in private life, he often finds it most prudent to submit to the censure, and leave to time the vindication of his character. I have often done so. The well-known motives which actuate his accusers, frequently afford an antidote to the poison which they endeavour to instil. I have had my share of this protection; but none of those observations which are applicable to the present occasion. The imputations, for such I feel them to be, are cast upon my judicial character, and proceed from honourable men, who, like myself, are acting, and may conceive, in the discharge of great public duties. Their imputations become the more oppressive in proportion to the reluctance with which they appear to be expressed. What they do not justify they excuse. This well intended policy aggravates the charge.
 It has therefore become my bounden duty, if possible, to disabuse both the House and the public, and to vindicate those high characters to whose honourable opinion, in the first instance, I owe my promotion at the Bar, and to the Bench. The character of a Judge is not his exclusive property; it equally belongs to the King and the people, and therefore in advocating that character, I advocate their most essential rights. In maintaining myself, I am maintaining the purity of the law, and the credit which should always attend the general administration of justice.
 There is a degree of depravity which corrects itself, by the removal of the Judge; but I deprecate that middle course which tarnishes his honour, and yet leaves him to linger in the seat of justice; which consigns him to a sort of judicial purgatory, suspected, but not condemned, too bad to be trusted, and not bad enough to be removed.

APPREHENSION OF THE MURDERERS OF MRS. TORRANCE.
 This morning, at eight o'clock, Mr. Weldon, Chief Peace Officer of Major Warburton's Police with twelve of that very efficient Corps, mounted, arrived in this City with the body of Thomas Molony, alias Finneane, charged with being one of the Murderers of Mrs. Torrance. He was taken in bed, in the house of a man named Dillon, in Cratloe-wood, about two o'clock this morning, and on the entry of the officer into the room where he lay, was so alarmed, that we are told he fainted, and remained apparently in a lifeless state for some time.
 An examination then took place, and the owner of the house at first stated that Molony (whose name he called Dillon) had been with him for the last fortnight, but subsequently having prevaricated very much, and Major Warburton having warned him of the consequence, admitted that he had only come there the night before, and that he knew nothing at all about him. Molony denied his name, and on being questioned as to his business in the County Clare, said, that it was "to look for a charm for a disease he had."
 He answers fully the description given of him in the newspapers, but has the appearance of being much fatigued and worn by continual wandering about. He was brought in on horseback and immediately conveyed to Mr. Torrance's Lodgings, who, at first view of him said, that he had no doubt but he was the person who had murdered his wife. The fellow seems very much dejected.
 The accuracy of Major Warburton's information, and the precision with which it was carried into effect, is praise-worthy: he left Kilmish yesterday morning in the Steam Boat, and landed at Bunratty Castle, and at the appointed hour, the party of his Police who set out in the evening from Kilmish had the wood surrounded to prevent the possibility of an escape.
 Four o'clock.
 We have great pleasure in adding, that the second Murderer is also apprehended—his name is John Macnamara, alias Shawn Rue, and was taken by Henry Lyons, Esq. with a party of Mr. Going's Police, in the town of Croom, last night—he has just passed our Office on his way to the County Jail, accompanied by Alderman Ormsby, several City High-Constables, and a strong detachment of the Carbineers.
 Five o'clock.
 Macnamara is now under examination and will in the course of the evening be viewed by Mr. Torrance.
 An examination of Molony has just concluded before Mr. Going, Mr. Cuthbert, several County Magistrates, Aldermen Watson and Ormsby, the result of which is an identity of Macnamara as being Molony's confederate in the murder.
 It is very remarkable, that but a few hours intervened between the time of the apprehension of both these murderers, though in different counties.
 This day, a man named Boyle, apprehended by Captain R. Leslie, at Tarbert, was lodged in Jail under an escort of his Yeomanry Corps.

 Limerick June 23.

We cannot sufficiently praise the promptitude with which the Committee of the Fever Hospital have opened the doors of that invaluable Institution for the reception of persons afflicted with that dreadful malady which ravages this City. (See Advertisement.) We have authority to state, that five persons labouring under Dysentery, have been already admitted to the Hospital, and are doing well, and that beds for thirty-two more will be in readiness in the course of the day.
 The Committee of the Lying-in-Hospital yesterday, resolved on immediately fitting up a distinct apartment for such objects as are admissible into this Hospital and who may be afflicted with dysentery. The funds of this Institution being so precarious and at all times so low, a humane and generous public is earnestly called on for pecuniary aid to meet this additional expense; and surely, if one case more than another calls for peculiar attention, it is the situation of a woman pregnant, labouring under such an afflicting disease.—The Patroness, Mrs. Elrington, the Committee of Ladies, or Rev. William D. Hoare, Treasurer, will receive the smallest contributions that may be offered on such a trying occasion.
