EXECUTION OF WALKER AND FITZGERALD, FOR WHITEBOYISM.

These unfortunate culprits suffered the sentence of the law on Wednesday last, in distinct parts of this County. At twelve o'clock, George Walker was hanged at Newcastle. At the gallows, he stated that he was innocent of the crime for which he suffered, and that he was totally ignorant of any business connected with whiteboyism. He appeared resigned, and joined the Clergyman in ardent prayers for the salvation of his soul. After life was quite extinct, the Sheriff proceeded to Shanagolden, where Edmund Fitzgerald, the school-master, was executed, for robbing Mr. Morgan, of Dunmoylan, of fire-arms. He, too, declared his innocence of the crime for which he expiated his life, but said, that he was deeply concerned in the bad business that was going on in the country, and, perhaps, with some truth, might be considered a leader—at all events, he was frequently employed in writing Captain Rock's notices and laws. The Rev. Mr. Hogan, P. P. attended Walker's execution, and the Rev. Mr. Fitzgerald, P. P. of Knockaderry, the hanging of Fitzgerald. Both these Reverend Gentlemen, in the most forcible language, pointed out the madness and folly of the peasantry continuing in a state of insurrection—that nothing would follow their chimerical projects, but the gallows, or estrangement to a foreign land; and concluded their addresses, by joining in a fervent prayer, that their flocks would at last perceive their folly, restore the plundered fire-arms, take the oath of allegiance, and become loyal subjects. The effect of these addresses had a very sensible impression on the numerous auditory that were collected, and it is hoped may produce the best results.

It must be truly deplorable to conceive, how a fellow-creature would go into eternity uttering a falsehood, as must be the case with Fitzgerald, as, in addition to the clear testimony adduced on his trial, he, no later than ten days ago, sent for Mr. Morgan, (the Gentleman who prosecuted him,) and, in the presence of a respectable person, mentioned that his conviction was just, and thanked him for the lenient manner in which he delivered his testimony.

The bodies of Fitzgerald and Walker were brought to Limerick on Thursday afternoon, and interred in the Insurgents hole at the rear of the old County Jail.

In addition to the conviction of two of the villains, for the late brutal outrage on the women of the Rifle Brigade, (see our report in fourth

SPECIAL SESSIONS, UNDER THE INSURRECTION ACT

Trial and conviction of the felons taken with arms on Monday last, in the Mountains of Newcastle.

FRIDAY, APRIL 12.

The Civil Business, in which Mr. Lloyd had been engaged during the preceding day, was suspended, and the crowded state of the Court, gave an importance to the trial of the following seven persons, who had recently taken in women's apparel:—Daniel Foley (James Shanahan, Thomas Dea, Michael Sullivan, Fitzpatrick, Hugh O'Donnell, and Michael Hartnett). A paper was handed up by the prisoners, through Agent, Mr. Odell, the contents of which we know it had no effect on the Court. The trial was then proceeded upon.

The Rev. William Ashe, examined by the witness is a Clergyman of the Established Church; Magistrate; lives in the neighbourhood of Crean; on Monday last, a person came into his house, and told him that his cattle were being taken away by whiteboys; would, if permitted in point of order, state the circumstances preceding this fact, which would explain more clearly the case; he had received information on Sunday last, that the cattle which had been taken from him some time since, related the circumstance to Mr. William Carte and Mr. Furlong, who promised on the following morning to fast with the witness, and bring the bounds and guns with them; on Easter Monday morning witness got up early, accompanied by his servant; he went to the mountains of Glenmaquin, and started a hare; for some time he was separated from him, but quickly returned, saying a man had beckoned to him with his coat off; witness went to where this person was, and he saw seven men there, with their coats buttoned up to and over their chins; witness saw arms with the prisoners, he believed guns; they lay in a posture to interrupt his return; he went by a circuitous direction and avoided them; on his return home started another hare, and came pretty close to his chase down upon them a second time, not knowing they were so near; they were laying on their face and had one of them started up and presented a gun, not exactly at the witness, the lock of which burned priming; witness went off and returned home; shortly after Mr. Carte and Thomas Furlong came to breakfast according to promise; they said it was unsafe to proceed to the mountains with guns only, and witness sent to Newcastle for a pair of pistols; as he was just going out a young man named Connell came in and said whiteboys were driving off the cattle; they were in women's clothes, and they were killing the cattle; witness himself and brother, and the Messrs. Furlong and Carte went out to the place where they were told these violations were committing; the insurgents had fled, which led witness to think their informant was in error; witness's brother and Furlong went in chase of a hare, and Mr. Carte remained with witness; Connell then said that the whiteboys were gone to his mother's house; witness took means to intercept them, when he shortly saw seven persons near the mountains in women's clothes; some had gowns and turbans on the others had petticoats, and one wore a black mask; Mr. Carte fired at one of them though distant they were; there was a large field of 10 acres; they were on the fire of them came into the field where witness and Mr. Carte were; he saw two guns and a sword with those persons ran towards witness brandishing their guns, shaking their hats, and shouting; witness's brother and Mr. Furlong were on in the rear; when they came close they turned
