...to the times that, in many instances, he cannot but ascribe to a moral weakness, induces him once more to call upon his debtors at large to do their duty.
According to the Proprietor's request at this moment it is to him an object of the most material advantage, in accelerating arrangements now in progress for the revival of that Journal. To accomplish this he has ordered a new font of Type from London, so as to render THE LIMERICK EVENING POST as well printed a Newspaper as any in the British Empire. As to the principles upon which it will be conducted that is, to be a spirit which, during ten campaigns in the public service, gave to the Evening Post a first place amid the Press of Ireland is the best security he can offer to the City and Country of his birth.
While it will be his duty to watch, with a jealous anxiety for the public weal, the conduct or misconduct of public men, no private feeling or course reaction shall ever disgrace the columns of his Paper.
In time of war the more agreeable duties of the Press yield to the storms that agitate the world, but its more sterling labours are known and valued in promoting the blessings of peace; to these will the Evening Post be zealously devoted—to heal the wounds of its distracted Country—to encourage the fine arts, and to point out means of employment for an excessive population. To lead and direct their powers to give strength and stability to the Empire should be the feeling of every friend to the British Constitution, and the Press that holds these in view legitimately aspires to the patronage of an enlightened people.
To those Individuals to whom he had ascribed the suspension of his labours for the last year the Proprietor of The Limerick Evening Post tenders his forgetfulness of the past; and if in the moment of neglect he has shown a contrary feeling himself he now most sincerely solicits theirs. To commune and identify his future views with the sound and well judging of his fellow-Citizens is the association he ambitions, and upheld by them he proffers for himself in return that comparing small things with great—

THE SEVENTH SERMON of the Reverend RICHARD HAYES.
"Summary of the foregoing Sermons; Use of the Latin Tongue."

The present Sermon closes with the following Notice:—
"Take Notice, then, my Brethren, that in my next, that is to say, my Eighth Sermon, to be published on this day fortnight, I will pass in review the following productions, which have fallen into my hands, together with such others of the same stamp, as may, in the meantime, merit my attention:—
1. A Tract, intitled, "Observations, &c.—By a Catholic, not a Roman Catholic." This profound Observer seems to have hit upon a notable discovery, namely, the existence of two Catholic Churches.—2. A Pamphlet, styled, "Questions by a Protestant Clergyman." I should rather suspect the questioner to be a Jew, for he asks very seriously, p. 5, did not the Jews themselves, long before the Reformation, object to the Real Presence.—3. Some scattered Luccubrations of that Don Quixote of Controversy, the Rev. Sir Harcourt Lees, alias Sir Jack the Giant-Killer, who, with his political club, lays prostrate, at a blow, whole phalanxes of Saints, Popes, Bishops and Jesuits; a Champion, in short, every way worthy the cause he defends.—4. "A Reply, &c. by the Rev. J. Cousins, Ex-Catholic Curate of Ennisceorby, Ex-Protestant Curate of Killisandra, and Prebendary of Ballycubane; in a word, the
N. B.—The Author again requests the Proprietors of Newspapers, whom he has authorized to advertise his Sermons, to send in their Bills to him, 3, Suffolk-street, without delay. Such as shall not have done so, before the end of December, and therefore forward every three months at farthest, are hereby directed not to continue their insertions; for the Author is determined to avoid long Bills. He also requests them, when making their charges, to consider his Advertisements as repetitions; because, though they differ somewhat from each other, yet their insertion recurs every fortnight,
