PROSPECTUS OF THE NEW THREE-DAY-A-WEEK NEWSPAPER.

Published in Dublin on the Evenings of SUNDAY, WEDNESDAY, AND FRIDAY. A remarkable fact, that no Newspaper—or at least would understand by the term Newspaper—is present, in the Metropolis of Ireland, on the Monday, Wednesday, and Friday! This deficiency at a time when Education has taken a wide range; when a Newspaper has become a necessity, not to be dispensed with, even by the most fastidious, instead of being, as in other countries, a luxury reserved for the fastidious palate of the period of History, Foreign or Domestic, more does the present, with stimuli to excite the most intense curiosity, even of those the to the mighty changes in progress every No former period can be compared with the promise of great events—how far distant soever w "the mind's eye," to contemplate the lower.

The moral world seems agitated by anticipations of an impending convulsion. How soon, and how terrible, the destroying torrent may issue forth, and how solation abroad, are circumstances which yet unexplained from our view.

from the City of Dublin—from the Irish Messengers of being without a Newspaper on three week; and to afford to our fellow-citizens, and men generally, an opportunity to regale themselves with Evening news on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays proposed to publish on the Evenings of those Three-Day Newspaper to be called THE DUBLIN EVENING MAIL,

A TWENTY COLUMN PAPER, to appear on Monday, the 3d of February before the commencement of the ensuing Session—a Session promising to be of an important precedent in the Parliamentary annals of the Kingdom.

A feature of all Periodical Journals intended as a source of intelligence. In this quality more immediately its actual value to the Purchaser or Subscriber, of the Dublin Evening Mail pledge themselves in respect, it shall stand unrivalled by any Journal. They possess facilities and means to effect this within the reach of other Journalists.

The Dublin Evening Mail will support the Administration of Queen Victoria. It will aid this excellent Chief in carrying into effect the beneficent parting in our Sovereign, the King. In acquitting ourselves of a part of our duty, we shall always bear in remembrance the words of our illustrious Viceroy, on a recent occasion—that, "he come to Ireland not to administer the Laws." We shall adopt appropriate words, dictated by wisdom and experience, to guide and our guide.

ness shall be to soften all political asperities—not the acerbity of party. We shall not excite the one class of our countrymen, nor awaken the doridities of another. We would unite, not divide a people whose hearts are naturally susceptible of every social sentiment impression. On a nearer acquaintance, men of parties usually discover, that there are on both sides men and more agreeable companions, than previously formed of each other, had taught them to
