

SATURDAY (THIS DAY.)

Judge Burton received the City Presentments, and discharged all untried prisoners by proclamation; this terminated the Assizes, and their Lordships, the Judges, proceeded for Beechmount, the seat of Thomas Lloyd, Esq. on their way to Tralee, where the Assizes will commence on Monday.

THE EXECUTION OF NEVILLE AND FITZGIBBON FOR THE MURDER OF THE LATE MAJOR GOING.

Between one and two o'clock yesterday, these men were conducted from the cell in which they had been confined since their conviction, to the place of execution at the New County Gaol. Neville was first led out by two Roman Catholic Clergymen; he was dressed in a Flannel Jacket and Trowsers. Fitzgibbon appeared in some few minutes after, and was also attended by two Divines of the same Religion; he wore a large grey frize coat. Neville carried a head, and seemed to be absorbed in devotion. Fitzgibbon repeated the prayers which were read by the Reverend Gentlemen who accompanied him, and had rather a smiling aspect while he was proceeding through the yards and avenue of the prison. Having ascended to the summit of the building where the gallows stands, the convicts knelt and spent some minutes in prayer. Neville was calm and contrite, he attentively listened to his spiritual comforters, and evinced all the placidity of a resigned penitent. Although Fitzgibbon engaged in prayer, yet he assumed somewhat of the mock-heroic; and notwithstanding that his manner was more careless than Neville's, still he wanted the steady and moral courage with which the latter seemed to be sustained.—Neville went upon the platform first, and in stepping up the ladder took long strides; Fitzgibbon instantly followed.—Upon presenting themselves to the vast concourse of people who had assembled without the Prison beneath, Fitzgibbon addressed them thus—"Well boys, men and women as you are below there, God bless you all—take warning by our fate—you have seen the innocent as well as the guilty suffer, therefore take care and avoid bad company who may seduce you to break the laws—I forgive every body—God bless you all." Neville spoke similarly. After he had ceased, Sheriff Cutburt made some observation to one of the Clergymen who was attending him; upon which Fitzgibbon, who was at the other end of the platform, interposed, and asked Mr. C. "what do you wish to know Sir?"—Mr. C. then, in a solemn and pathetic tone of voice, replied—"I wish to ask you Fitzgibbon, now that you are about to die, if you are guilty of the crime for which you are going to suffer?" To which Fitzgibbon quickly and fluently answered, "If you'll call to me about this time to-morrow I'll tell you"—The levity with which this was uttered caused a thrill of horror to pierce the breast of every body present; and produced a mingled sensation of dismay and disgust at such obduracy of nature and audacity of demeanour.—Fitz-Gibbon again addressed the people in the same phrase in which he had before spoken—and the Rev. Mr. O'Regan having desired him to tell the people to give up whatever fire-arms they possessed, he refused to do so. The platform having been removed, both the criminals dropt.—Neville died in a very short time; but his unhappy and ill-fated companion in shame, suffered the most afflictive agony for a considerable time, owing to the awkward manner in which the rope was adjusted. These men had neither slept or eaten for the last two days and two nights, with the exception of having taken a few spoons-full of gruel—all that time was occupied in prayer and penance; they however appeared quite strong and not in the least degree exhausted. It would have been a great satisfaction to the public mind as well as to the laws and justice of the country, if these men had made a public declaration of the parts they had acted in the atrocious murder for which they suffered. The language and conduct of Fitzgibbon left neither pity for his fate, nor doubt of his criminality.

We are informed that on Thursday night, Neville acknowledged to a friend of his from Rathkeale, who visited the wretched wretch in his cell, that he was guilty of the murder of Major Going.

The zeal and ability manifested by Mr. Vokes, in bringing the offenders to justice, were as conspicuous as in the prosecution of the murderers of young Mr. Hoskins, and Buckley the crown witness, and Mrs. Torrance—it is not a little remarkable, that the three latter murders were committed on the Sabbath day.

Mr. Vokes was assisted in apprehending Neville, by Mr. Adamson, of Newborough Association—a body that have, at all times, rendered the most efficient service in preserving the peace.

The Grand Jury of the County, after the most mature deliberation, have ignored the bills of indictment, which it was deemed necessary to lay before them, against Mrs. Matilda Bateman, for poisoning her child.

In the City Court, yesterday, an inquisition was holden before the Sheriff, to assess damages in the case. Crips a. Cudmore, for dilapidation of premises; it occupied nearly four hours.—Verdict for plaintiff, £130 damages, with costs.

Last night a party of insurgents burned a rick of hay on the Glebe lands of Bruce, in this County, the property of the Dean of Limerick and the Rev. Mr. Bevan. They also consumed the herdsman's house, with all the furniture belonging to the Rev. Mr. Keating—the fellows were armed, and fired several shots.

Next week is certainly, we understand, the last week that the public will have an opportunity of viewing the Exhibition of Automotons now at the Assembly Room, Charlotte's-quay—we would, therefore, earnestly recommend all those who have not seen it, to avail themselves of this positively last opportunity, of beholding in this City the most extraordinary works of the kind that were ever offered to general notice, and which have hitherto given such universal delight; neither our leisure nor space will allow us to attempt to convey, by description, any notion of the beauty and excellence of Mr. Maillardet's wonderful pieces of mechanism—but we shall not hesitate to assert, that those who might be induced by other recommendation to inspect them, will feel grateful to us for a gratification of no ordinary kind.
