Tuesday, July 15. Half past nine, morning. Tuesday, July 22. Half past three, afternoon. Tuesday, July 29. Eight, morning. And from Bristol to Cork every Saturday.

BY DUBLIN,

His Majesty's beautiful, new and fast sailing Steam Packet, PALMERSTON, which leaves the North Wall, Dublin, for Bristol, every Saturday; and leaves Bristol for Dublin every Wednesday. Agent's Office, 33, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin, of whom every necessary information may be had.

The above routes are the most expeditious, pleasant, and economical way to London, Bath, Cheltenham, all the fashionable watering places, the South, East, and West of England, and the Continent. These Steam Packets are built entirely of Oak from the identical models and plans of the Royal Sovereign and Meteor Post Office Steam Packets, (which, from their superior construction, have continued their voyages regularly during the whole Winter). They are completed with engines of the best and most approved principle; their accommodations are arranged in separate Cabins. Male and Female Attendants.

The Proprietors of the above Vessels beg respectfully to observe, that the PALMERSTON is built of such size as enables her to embark her Passengers at the quay of Dublin; whereby the Public avoid the unpleasant and dangerous embarkation at Duncurry, in small boats, and are saved the trouble and expense of travelling by land to Duncurry; the inconveniences of which are generally complained of.

J. N. SMART, Managing Proprietor for Cork.
