

CORK, JULY 10.

a letter from Skibbereen, dated July 7:—"This part of the country is in the worst state of irritation. The Magistrate is expected to hold an Inquest, as the Coroner has not arrived until Friday evening, and the presence of all the Magistrates and Generals in the neighbourhood did not seem to have any influence on the minds of the country. It was feared an attempt would have been made on the life of Mr. Morrill, who was chosen as the people were sufficiently ignorant. One woman put down her child, and threw a large stone to commence the affray, and was stopped for a moment by a person near the Magistrate, who then begged Mr. Morrill to do what he did, before the people were in any way excited. On the arrival of the Coroner, it was found impossible for Mr. Morrill to attend the Inquest, if held in a house of the parish, without a strong force of police to protect them; it was accordingly ordered to this town. His house is expected to be burnt, and in consequence, a corporal's company of the Rifle Brigade and two of the Police are stationed there on Saturday night, to prevent any arrangements can be effected for its destruction."

TUESDAY, JULY 8.
Waggett, Recorder, held a Court at the Court-House having been adjourned Monday with the Election of City

Travers was charged with assaulting a woman. The parties in this case were the prosecutor deposed that the defendant had beaten him most cruelly. The assault was occasioned by a quarrel that had taken place between the Prosecutor's and Travers, who did not exceed three or four blows.

A third brother, D. Spillane, appeared for the defence.—The whole transaction evinced a complete destitution of natural feeling and of the respect that should be shown to the solemn obligation of an oath. In the evidence, the Recorder took notice of the melancholy frequency of such cases, and that which had just been exhibited. He said that he now despaired of seeing any improvement in the manners or habits of the people in this City. He had been sitting on the Bench for 15 years, and during that time had seen no apparent progress in the moral improvement of the population. Was it not disgraceful to see a populous City, containing a large number of religious institutions, of religious persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion, who boast so much of obedience to the laws—was it not disgraceful to see persons like these who had been brought up in the love of their country, and indulging their angry passions—nay, more, fomenting quarrels even between such tender

DISCOVERY OF PIKES.

Information reached the office of Thomas P. Vokes, Esq. Chief Magistrate of Police, that on Wednesday night, Gerald Blennerhassett, Esq. accompanied by Mr. Kiely, Chief Constable, and the Police from Rathkeale, proceeded on a tour of information to Knockferna Hill, in this County, where they found 58 pikes, concealed in a wall, on the remotest part of the mount. The pikes are represented to be made similarly to those used in the insurrectionary proceedings which occurred in the metropolis, in 1803.

A most blood-thirsty and treacherous murder was committed in the County Clare, near the confines of this City, on Thursday night—the object of assassination was a faithful steward, marked out by the Rockite system for destruction, solely because he was honest. The occurrence is detailed to us as follows;—

"About the hour of twelve o'clock on Thursday night, three or four fellows, under pretence of being of the Police, stationed at Parteen, went to the house of Michael Ryan, steward and manager of a farm at Athlonecard, County of Clare, within three miles of this City, part of the estate of Thomas Jackson, Esq. On Ryan getting out of bed, to admit (as he thought) the Police Constable, he was dragged out, and beat so dreadfully with the laths of a gate and with stones, that he died on the spot. The Police and Military at Parteen, being apprized of the murder, made diligent search in that neighbourhood, and apprehended two persons on strong suspicion. The only cause of this shocking murder is attributed to Ryan acting faithfully to his employer. The deceased has left a widow and three children."

This morning, we were informed that Sir H. D. Massy, and the Magistrates in his neighbourhood assembled yesterday at O'Brien's-bridge, investigating this horrid outrage—their deliberations are adjourned to this day, to Ardnacrusha. Six men are in custody.

Tuesday night, a house was burnt at Gardenhill, in this County. The proprietor had been served a few days before with one of Captain Rock's notices, not to take the farms, but if he persisted in it to provide his coffin.

On Thursday last, at noon, a horse belonging to a man named Edmond Burns, was barbarously houghed by some villains, on the lands of Kildimo. This poor man's property has severely suffered by the acts of Captain Rock—his crime was taking the above farm, the former tenant having been evicted. A dwelling-house of his was burned and two cows killed, a short time back.

The inquests held on the four men killed at Castlehaven, Co. Cork, in endeavouring to recover Mr. Morrill's tithes, finished on Thursday—Verdict—"That two of the men came by their deaths in consequence of gun-shot wounds, and Ingram, of Cork, from ever to Emigrate to the Cape of Good Hope, as signified by the pleasing Letter from the Labouring Tradesmen, who left the Kingdom in 1819 and 1820, in hopes of procuring enormous Wages they receive, and to enjoy at Cape Town, in comparison of the misery they left behind them. Ingram's power to take out of the country small children, he would be ready to embark; but he could not take a well-conducted, able-bodied man, as well as boys and girls, of every age, all of whom will find employment immediately on their arrival; and on liberal terms, provided they conduct themselves with sobriety and fidelity, particularly the Dutch Inhabitants, who are a respectable people. We are well satisfied that the Tradesmen can earn six, and eight shillings a day.

The Commissioners in the County of Cork, and James Roche, of Cork, were on Tuesday and Wednesday last, to receive further proof of delinquency.
