The ball at Newcastle, on Thursday evening, was by far the most select, and the most numerously attended, ever witnessed in that town, having consisted of upwards of seventy persons, some of whom resided ten miles distant. The arrangements gave universal satisfaction, and were highly creditable to the Stewards, whose unremitting attentions were felt and acknowledged by every individual present. The music was excellent; the fine band of the 10th having relieved the violins occasionally, and delighted the company at intervals, between dancing, and during supper. The rooms, &c. were lighted with wax and lamps, and were tastefully hung with evergreens, interspersed with artificial flowers, and designs emblematic of the accession of our gracious Sovereign. The supper tables presented a profusion of those delicacies, which are usually met with at the first private parties, with wines of the best quality. After supper, dancing recommenced, and continued till six o'clock, when the company retired, highly gratified with the agreeable entertainment they had enjoyed.

AND PUFFING EXPOSED. BRITISH COMMISSION WOOLLEN WARE-HOUSE.

No. 19, Charlottes-Quay, WITHIN TWO DOORS OF BANK PLACE, Established 10th November 1823, One Month after the Repeal of Duties.

THE PROPRIETOR OF THE BRITISH COMMISSION WOOLLEN WARE-HOUSE, before he commenced business in the above Establishment, having made arrangements with the most respectable Houses in England and Ireland, at considerable expence, and the most unvaried exertion, for the purpose of being enabled to offer to the Public, a most splendid and extensive Assortment of every Article in the WOOLLEN DRAPERY Line, of the newest manufacture, clear of the charges usually laid on by the intermediate Factor, and free of Duty, informed the Public, fearlessly and boldly, of the very great advantages to be found by purchasing at his Establishment—advantages, which he again asserts, but few Houses in Ireland can now offer. In so doing, he begs particularly to impress, that he was actuated by no motive, save that alone which it was natural he should feel, that of serving his own interest, while at the same time he benefited the Public. It was never his desire to injure the honest efforts of the industrious, or retard for a moment the fair and honorable competition of those in his own line of business; but finding, as he ought, the importance of his own situation, and the many and unprecedented benefits which his Establishment, as it is now formed, has the power of bestowing; who, possessed of common sense or understanding, could blame him for a moment, in laying those advantages before the Public, and soliciting, as he now does, their countenance and support. But it is the course and usage of society, that individuals will be found, who destitute of those principles and feeling, without which society cannot exist—wish to destroy what they cannot imitate—who with the cunning of the serpent, and the poison of the adder, endeavour to efface that which is good, and by the noxious slime that accompanies their course throughout life, to blast that which may be advantageous to others. By such a rattle has the Proprietor of this Establishment been attacked—he will not stain his paper by writing his name—he is now well known to the Public, in consequence of his base, unmanly, and malignant attacks. The writer of this article, in order to expose, as it was his duty to do, the unfounded pretensions of this self-created Agent, he demanded the answer of CERTAIN QUERIES, which are in the recollection of all—and how are they answered? Look at his Advertisement in Last Saturday's Paper, it breathes of the polluted atmosphere in which it was engendered, and is well worthy of the malignant disposition that gave it birth. The Proprietor of this Establishment feels it unnecessary to inform the Public how or where he commenced, as it is well known his Capital was the largest embarked in the Woollen Trade, for the last twenty years; but as it may be important for the Public, to know how this self-imposing Agent of the West of England got into business, the contrast between them is striking, and ought to be made known. He purchased the old Stock of Mr. ROONEY, then getting out of business, on TRUCE; and when able to make an addition to that Stock, where did he procure it? Was it in the West of England? It was at that highly respectable Establishment of Mr. HONAN'S, within two doors of his own; this is a fact too strong to be denied. What can the Public now think of him, when, on the 4th and 5th of last March, he purchased of the said Mr. HONAN'S Woollen Cloths to the
