

the above Establishment, having made arrangements in the most respectable Houses in England and a considerable expence, and the most unwearying for the purpose of being enabled to offer to the most splendid and extensive Assortment of every the WOOLLEN DRAPERY Line, of the newest and the clear of the charges usually laid on by the Factor, and free of Duty, informed the Public, and boldly, of the very great advantages to be purchasing at his Establishment—advantages, again asserts, but few Houses in Ireland can now so doing, he begs particularly to impress, that he is not actuated by any motive, save that alone which it was his duty to feel, that of serving his own interest, while at the same time he benefitted the Public. It was never his intention to injure the honest efforts of the industrious, or to prevent the fair and honorable competition of his own line of business; but finding, as he ought, the want of his own situation, and the many and varied benefits which his Establishment, as it is now, is the power of bestowing; who, possessed of common sense and understanding, could blame him for a moment, whose advantages before the Public, and soliciting, does, their countenance and support. But it is the duty of the Public, that individuals will be found, who, without those principles and feelings, without which cannot exist—wish to destroy what they cannot understand, with the cunning of the serpent, and the poison of the viper, endeavour to efface that which is good, and to substitute that which accompanies their course throughout, and that which may be advantageous to others.—The Proprietor of this Establishment, who is now well known to the Public, in consequence of the unmanly, and malignant attacks. The writer of this article, in order to expose, as it was his duty to do, the pretensions of this self-created Agent, deprecates the CERTAIN QUERIES, which are in the possession of all—and how are they answered? Look at the advertisement in last Saturday's Paper, it breathes of a false atmosphere in which it was engendered, and is the offspring of the malignant disposition that gave it birth. The Proprietor of this Establishment feels it unnecessary to state to the public how or where he commenced, as it is well known that his Capital was the largest embarked in the Woollen Trade in the last twenty years; but as it may be important to the Public, to know how this self-imposing Agent of the England got into business, the contrast between the old Stock of Mr. ROONEY, then getting out of the West of England, and when able to make an addition to it, where did he procure it? Was it in the West of England? It was at that highly respectable Establishment of ANAN'S, within two doors of his own; this is a fact to be denied. What can the Public now say, when, on the 4th and 5th of last March, he at the said Mr. Honan's Woollen Cloths to the amount of ONE THOUSAND POUNDS. He now pause, and take a peep at this modest Gentleman's advertisements on the 8th and 15th of March last, and he will be struck like a second Don Quixote, Agent of England Manufacturers! and well may we be the unblushing effrontery, and brazen hardness of a who, purchasing his Goods in the City of Limerick, endeavours to make the Public believe him Agent, and almost Manufacturer of his own Goods. Facts are facts, and public opinion can be formed, and facts too strong to be denied, too stubborn to be contradicted. The Proprietor sincerely regrets that the attacks made on him by this contemptible individual induce him to lay before the public the claims which he would be Agent to their support, and the system on which his business is founded. He trusts he has done so in a candid manner, without descending to that scurrilous and unbecoming, which so truly mark the low and illiterate of his own dignity, he hopes he has preserved the public will from, from this plain statement how far confidence can be placed in the boasting of the West of England; while on the other hand, he has subjected investigation as to the truth of what he has asserted, that of being able to offer superior advantages to Purchasers at his Establishment, conscious that a man will convince, he rests his claims before a discerning Public, who know too well the difference between the real and the base counterfeit.
