DEATHS.

This morning, in Patrick-street, after a tedious illness, which she bore with real christian fortitude, Mrs. Fitzgibbon, relict of the late John Fitzgibbon, Esq.; a lady most deservedly lamented by her respectable family and friends.
 At Paradise Lodge, County Tipperary, Eliza Jamieson, relict of the late B. Lockwood, Esq.; in July last, she had to mourn the loss of a most tender husband, which prayed on her early years, and deprived her of that life which she could have enjoyed, for even friendship without love is void. The lines which a kind friend left among some strewed flowers on the grave of her late husband, will now be inscribed on the marble slab that covers the tomb of this attached pair.
 At Nenagh, on Sunday last, the Rev. Thomas O'Meara. It is stated that, shortly previous to his last hours, he embraced the doctrines of the Roman Catholic faith. It will be recollected that when an enquiry into the conduct of a Royal Duke was going on before the Commons, it was represented that Mr. O'Meara was, through Privately recommendation, allowed to preach before the late King at Windsor, with a view to his advancement to a Mitre; but his Majesty declined his assent, in consequence of the Rev. Gentleman's name commencing with an O.
 At Bloomfield, near Newport, Mrs. Anderson, aged 100, widow of the late William Anderson, of Fox-hall, Esq.—few arrive at such an age—fewer still so respected, and beloved through life—and none more regretted in death.
 At his house in Dominick-street, Cork, Mr. William Quinn, sen.
