We announced in our last the death of the Lady of John Lee, Esq.—no woman has departed more respected or more regretted; in her were centered the domestic wife, the fond parent, and disinterested friend. The circumstance of her dissolution is truly awful—in the bloom of youth and beauty she closed her earthly career, by a mortification, as unlooked for as sudden, having been only indisposed a few short hours. The misery in which her beloved husband and parents have been plunged in, is indescribable.

Harnett, John Dwyer, James Quinlan, Patrick Coomey, John Crimin, John Lyons, and John Sheahan.

It next went through Mungret-street, High-street, Thomas-street, (retraced George's-street,) Bank-place, Charlotte's-quay, over Baal's-bridge, up Mary-street, Castle-street, and on through Thomond-gate to the Mayor's Stone, returning by the Distillery, then passed on through the Englistown, and Broad-street, whence it took the direct route to the New Barracks, where the Commander of the garrison, Sir John Elley, C. B. met it with the most gracious salute, (which was reciprocal with the chairing party) waving his hat several times and remaining uncovered until the procession passed, thence down the Military-Road, through the Crescent, loudly cheered by the lovely occupants of the several windows, wine and refreshments being sent out from many places.

At length the procession reached the Mayor's house, who, after the cheers abated, addressed the several Trades, twelve of whose banners were floating before the Chair, in the most feeling and impressive manner, he told them that he was so overpowered by the distinguished honor thus conferred an impression on his heart which would be effaced only with his existence; he was unconscious of having merited so much from them, as, during the year just passed he had merely discharged his duty, but in return for their kindness, it was but an act of Justice on his part, to acknowledge that in the various transactions that came before him, as well as from his official intercourse with the City at large, he never knew a more orderly, peaceable, or better conducted class of people than the Tradesmen of Limerick, (and cheers) and their regular and orderly conduct this day, added to that character in his estimation—they may be assured, he continued, that they would ever find in him the sincerity of a friend, and the protection of a Magistrate. He said he was incapable of saying more, and again thanked them. When he descended from the Chair, the air rent with their acclamations. Before we close this report, we cannot omit having noticed the cordial salutations of the Victuallers, on presenting the Mayor with their favors at the corner of Denmark-street, and the Shoemakers and Bakers were equally prominent. Indeed, take it all and all, it was the spontaneous offering of a generous good hearted people to an Excellent and upright Magistrate. It is gratifying to observe that this immense multitude separated without the slightest accident. The Mayor very liberally ordered refreshments to be distributed to the Trades, for which several Taverns were opened in different parts of the City, and all returned at an early hour to their respective homes in perfect good humour with the occurrences of the day. Several addresses have been since presented to him by the respective Guilds.—Limerick Evening Post.
