admitted-that he had occasion to recommend the dismissal of one, and to fine several others out of the seven that were under his immediate control, and that many of them displayed the badges of party, &c. How very unfortunate are some men! Now, Sir, in the part of Ireland where I reside, there are, and have been, more than seven men stationed for upwards of six years, both under Mr. Peel's and the late Constabulary Bill, and (strange to say!) not one of them was ever reprimanded, much less dismissed a fined. Yet, I can tell the gallant General the Magistrates here yield to him in nothing-neither in firmness, impartial justice, clemency, vigilance, regard for the honor and character of their native land; and further, I have last in Boyle, the satisfaction to state, that no party symbols were ever rris, K.
