

run gauntlet between an immense mob which assembled that purpose. The celebrated Mr. Thomas Flanagan, Sligo, is committed to Gaol, for assaulting Mr. John Burke, Clerk of the Peace, and has not yet found bail. Mr Flanagan is since liberated. The Hon. Butler Clarke was chaired through Castle-omer, on Saturday, and numerous bonfires testified the joy of the population at his election. In Cavan, on Tuesday, as 32 freeholders of Mr. Coote were entering the town and proceeding to that gentleman's tally room, they were opposed by a gang of desperadoes who fired three shots at them, and then rushed among them with sticks and bayonets. The result is one man killed and six dangerously wounded.

TRALEE JUNE 29. (From a Kerry paper.)

We commenced our Editorial duties this morning under an oppressive weight of grief and sorrow. We are old, and must, even within the scope of a cannot recollect much of the annals of our country, a circumstance as that we find lect so duty to detail. As Journalists we are bound, however, to lay before the public an impartial statement of facts, in the regular order of their recurrence, up to the lamentable catastrophe which they led to, and which has thrown the town into the deepest mourning.

On Sunday last, about the hour of two o'clock, the stores of Mr. Bruce, which are immediately adjoining the Court-house, were attacked by a mob, under the impression that a large number of Lord Ventry's Freeholders were secreted there, and they proceeded to such acts of outrage that a party of the Rifle Brigade was obliged to be sent into town from the barracks for the protection of the place. The military succeeded, after some time and exertion, in dispersing the crowd of rioters, and as the deluded people passed through the square, they were addressed from the windows of his house by Mr. George Hickson, a Magistrate, who strongly advised them to retire peaceably; by these means tranquillity for the moment was restored—happy would it have been, had that tranquillity continued, and that we were spared the painful duty of laying before our readers the calamitous transactions of the day.

Colonel Crosbie's exertions during this disturbance, and for the prevention of riot for the whole day, were active and unremitting.

About four o'clock, a parcel of infuriated fellows, probably in a state of intoxication, set out towards Blennerville, in order as it was said to intercept any Freeholders in Mr. Hare's interest coming in from the Western Barony. (Corkaguiny,) and a party of mounted and other Police, went out from this town, accompanied by Major Mullins, George Rowan, Esq. and Roger O'Sullivan, Esq. Sub-Sheriff, to protect these Freeholders and escort them into town; and we have been informed, that some rioting did actually occur at Blennerville.

On the evening of that day about seven o'clock, a number of Freeholders on the Ardferf Estate came into the town. With them arrived the Heir of that estate (a child about nine years of age.) On their coming into town they (of course) were surrounded in the streets by multitudes of the populace, who proceeded with them to Colonel Crosbie's Committee Room, which is situate nearly opposite to Devine's Hotel. The crowds were addressed from the windows of the Hotel, by John O'Connell, Esq. and several other Gentlemen, who earnestly advised them peaceably to disperse, and any of them who had votes, to attend at the Hustings on the morrow. The people then did actually retire; and we believe the Ardferf Freeholders were intent on returning to their respective lodgings. At this moment a great number of Freeholders, belonging to the Estate of Lord Ventry, arrived from the Barony of Corkaguiny, accompanied by the Hon. Major Mullins, and several other Gentlemen, and with them, a party of the Constabulary force, and two or three Chief Constables. On the arrival of this party at the end of Nelson-street, they were met by the mob who assembled about the Ardferf Freeholders, and an immediate attack, with stones and other missiles, commenced on the Corkaguiny men, many of whom were very badly used, and they were compelled to fly in all directions for safety. A scene of confusion and riot here ensued, which it is impossible adequately to describe.

We lament to state that the Police and a detachment of the Rifle Brigade, (the Court-House, where they were stationed, having been attacked by the mob,) found it necessary (under the orders of the High Sheriff, and some Magistrates) to fire on the rioters, and we grieve to say, that five lives have been lost, and thirteen persons wounded some dangerously. The firing was principally from the Court-House and the adjoining lane, and shocking to relate, many of the sufferers were in no way concerned in the riot. Mr. Richard Williams, a respectable shoemaker, of excellent character, who resided opposite the Court-House, was shot, (almost instantaneously dead) through the door of his house, which he had closed; and Mr. George Macauley, a respectable Publican, was severely wounded, while standing up stairs in his dining-room, by a ball, which came through the window. An inquest of which this town has been the scene, improper, to do perhaps, at this stage, imprudent, if it is not, which has so, as the evidence on the Coroner's inquest will supply more been sitting since yesterday morning collect from the important details than it is possible conversation which one hears.

The High Sheriff left this last evening, where he stays, at as has been stated, but for Listowel, who resides there. He was escorted out of town by a day-party of Police, and the precaution was not unnecessary, taking into consideration the strong feeling which exists against him. Lord Ennismore remains in his lodgings guarded by Police. Colonel Crosbie is (inside) by a strong party of Police. The Knight of Kerry continues in the town; also here. The Knight of Kerry stands neuter and does not place to which the firing is directed. The walls of one of the houses look as if they had stood a siege, they are so marked and perforated with balls.

The indignation of the people of the town is only prevented from breaking out into acts of violent retaliation by the presence of the military and the advice of their friends; but there are crowds in the streets at the moment I am writing, who look as if they wished to be in action.

In the course of Sunday evening we regret to state that an unpleasant altercation occurred between Colonel Crosbie and Lord Ennismore, at the latter's hotel.

In consequence of the highly excited feelings of the populace of this town, John Bateman, Esq. of Oakpark, Captain of our Corps of Yeomanry very judiciously took the arms from the Yeomanry here, and had them safely lodged in the Barrack Stores. This measure of precaution has done Captain Bateman, such credit and honour.

Counsellor Collis, of Kinsale, and Counsellor King, are conducting the case on the Inquest, on behalf of the friends of the deceased, Counsellor Blake Hickson, for the High Sheriff. The Coroner is Eusebius Meg.

There has been no renewal of the High Sheriff's Election, to Monday next.

A report prevails, we trust without foundation, that Lord Ennismore has arising out of the late transactions at Tralee.

On Tuesday last, his Grace the Archbishop of Cashel held his Triennial Visitation for the Diocese of Ardferf and Aghadow, at Killarney, when there was a numerous attendance of the Clergy.

The Rev. Doctor Fort, Vicar-General, of the Diocese of Limerick, held his annual visitation on the same day, in the absence of the Lord Bishop of Limerick.

The Limerick Chronicle

SATURDAY, JULY 1.

There is not the least doubt of the return of Colonel Crosbie, for Kerry—if it remained, the transaction of Sunday last removed them. It is impossible to describe the angry feelings which made all ranks in that county; all the Tenantry of the Manors of Lansdowne have to a man declared themselves for Colonel Crosbie. Not the least symptom of disturbance has appeared, since the dreadful occurrence of Friday. It is considered the Sheriff has acted illegally, partially, by adjourning the Election.

Thursday evening, a man named Nestor, from the neighbourhood of Pallas, was attacked and beaten with stones by several persons, who it seems he had an old grudge against him; he was so severely injured that he died in about three hours after. Serjeant Dann, of the Constabulary Police, stationed there, instantly apprehended three of the principals, against whom there is positive evidence.

Mr. Cox, Coroner, held an inquest yesterday at Pallas-Kerry, on the body of James Nestor, who was killed in the street of the village. A verdict of wilful murder was returned against four of the most barbarous miscreants, one of whom, named Hickey, is in custody.

On Thursday evening, a man named Gleeson, of Cluggin, near Ulla, was taken to rescue cattle restrained under a decree, from the pound at Drumsalla, near Capamore, in which attempt he was opposed, and killed.

On Monday night, Michael James charged with the murder of Timothy Swan, at a dance in October, 1824, was apprehended by the Police, in the parish of Kilmealy, County Clare. Ever since the fatal transaction, he had been lurking about the Country, and when discovered by the Police, made an ineffectual attempt to escape.

Letters have been received in town announcing the death of Mr. Hutchings, Member for Cork his part, and he returned them thanks for the good per with which they received him. "Fair play is a Jewel," and that was all he required. He stood forward there to meet honestly and manfully any objections that were to be raised against him. If there were none, he would appeal to the people who alone were to dispose of the representation, to adhere to him, and the independence of their return would secure the Honour of the County.

On Monday, some partial skirmishing occurred on the New-Bridge, but no general engagement between the numerous partisans of the candidates, is attributable to the timely interposition of the r, aided by a party of the Scots' Greys.

On Friday, symptoms of the exhausted state of the County were quite apparent, and increased so rapidly during the day that several of the booths were closed, the freeholders requisite to keep them open not numbered within the time prescribed by law. The having been entirely vanished, and the great majority of the freeholders have all returned to their respective homes. Still there is every prospect of the contest being carried to the last moment, which must prove an enormous expense to the candidates.

On Friday, a venal and abandoned wretch was detected in the act of polling for the fourth time in the election! He evaded discovery on the three previous occasions, which it assuredly is not difficult to accomplish in the great confusion which attends the bringing in of numerous voters in such quick succession, but he was arrested at last in his career of guilt. He was snatched by the High Sheriff for perjury, and will be dealt with as his crime merits. There was a hard struggle between the Agents to-day to obtain a precedence on the poll, and when it was proclaimed the numbers were—

189; Maj' Grady, 183. Gross poll for the six days, Fitz-Gibbon, 288; Thomas Lloyd, Esq. 189; Maj' Grady, 183. Gross poll for the six days, Fitz-Gibbon, 4518, Lloyd, 3035, O'Grady, 2439.

Major Grady again thanked the electors, for the zealous manner in which they had supported him in the face of every impediment thrown in their way, the booths were not closed, there were still plenty open, and plenty of freeholders to be polled. He told them before he would hold the poll open for the last man in the County and he did not care whether that one voted against him or not he was only resolved to afford him an opportunity of exercising his voice. They were the only and legitimate possessors of the elective franchise, and an appeal now made to them, to exercise that right with a sense of justice and discretion. He made the appeal to them, and he could see no reason why he should not do so. If, when all the oaths were shut there appeared to be a majority against him, still he would thank them for their kind support, but while there was one man in his tally-room, who wished to give his vote for him, he would strive to keep the booths open. They only had a right to return a member, and no one else. He was only doing his duty in addressing them, and it should never be said their County was misled or misguided by him, if any objections could be made to him he would here meet them honestly and openly. I was anxious they should know the reasons why he offered himself to them, and that they might strengthen an acquaintance with the person who may be their choice. Major O'Grady concluded by hoping the same spirit of harmony and good humour, which marked the commencement of the election, should still be cherished on all sides, and then retired amidst the general applause of the Court, which frequently attended him during his speech.

Mr Lloyd presented himself to the Court, and was received with cheers, but spoke in such a low tone that we could not catch distantly the tendency of all his remarks. The unanimity of the two Candidates was, he said, at once a gratifying and a curious circumstance, in some respects. He was perfectly satisfied with his majority on the poll, if his own competitor felt equally pleased with his situation it. He (Mr Lloyd) first addressed the electors with the timidity of hope, and all the anxiety of success, but he now had the pleasure of addressing them with all the warmth of gratitude for their favors. He now came forward in the confidence of certain success, for the lost proficient in Arithmetic must see the high ground which he enjoys on the poll above his opponent. If he had the honor of being elected, he would cheerfully submit to any inquisitorial examination, and at any period they would think fit to require, his public conduct would be always open to a canvass. His only motive for heaven, he could assure them, for indulging the honorable ambition of being returned their representative was a pure and honest desire to promote their interests. Mr Lloyd was heard with applause, and the Court adjourned to this day, (Saturday.)
