

Dickson's splendid Serge, on the night was attended by all the beauty, fashion, of our City. The Company began to Nine o'Clock, and by half past Ten, not a tempestuous state of the weather on the elegant Mansion of the exhilarating and. So eager were the rotaries of Terpenence their sprightly pleasures, that a usually distinguished for her amiability of talents, condescendingly acquiesced with touch the keys of a Grand Piano, and quadrille sets, who were already formed, and hand's arrival, were put in motion on "tastic toe." In a short time the Band temporary Orchestra, prepared for them; former still continued at the instrument, and not only the dancers, but all brilliant execution. The emotions excited, gave a charm and zest to the evening. Celebrated as our City is for the personal charms of its women, as well as for the high mental attainments, they shone with more brilliancy than on Tuesday. The entertainment continued with unabated vivacity until near the supper rooms were thrown open to Ladies and Gentlemen, where the style and the arrangements were only equalled by the perfection of every delicacy that taste could possibly furnish. Some finely executed songs and sentiment gave life and spirit to the supper, dancing was resumed, and continued hour next morning, when every soul quit delighted with the various entertainments, and for the cheerfulness and gaiety of the evening we have been correctly informed, that this was the first of a series, which are to succeed in due order—a number of families of the first rank having taken the impulse so elegantly given on. In concluding this article, we may say, that, whether we contemplate Mr. Dickson's gentleman, (and a bachelor too), possessing a fortune, which he might, were he disposed, have instead of spending it usefully and wisely in his native City; or, as a Member of the Legislature, employing his time and applying his purse to the benefit of the condition of the humble orders of the people, beyond all doubt, a most prominent and useful citizen of Limerick.
