MECHANICS' INSTITUTE—This Establishment, we understand, is considerably improved in its finances, &c. within the last few months. The rooms, which are open during the day and in the evenings, are frequented by several respectable members, who attend to read, and the Committee have left nothing undone to afford the Politician, the Mechanic, and the Philosopher, a treat worthy of attending to. Now that matters are so conducted, we trust that the Mechanics and others will come forward not only to support this most useful and cheap institution, but to improve themselves in science and history. The subscription is only 12s. per annum, and subdivided into quarterly installments to accommodate the operatives.
