 The author of these Melodies has dedicated th country; not so much (as is evident from the ph of his dedication) with a view to the national char attaches to them, as in manifestation of his affection land whose liberty so frequently becomes the his muse.
 In a remarkably neat and attractive volume, w sented with a number of short lyrical pieces, embr jects of great variety; but for the most part appeal patriotism, or some other ennobling or benevolent our nature.
 But though the generality of these pieces are of character, there are many that may be classed ductions of a more playful or sentimental desc which touch upon the pathetic cords of local attach of early recollections. We refer our readers to itself, which will, we doubt not, find its way to th
