

Treasy and Whealon, the Terris swore they came there to take their lives, as they were appointed and sworn by their Committee to do so. They then fired two shots and left notices to the above effect.

A few nights ago, Pat. Warren, residing at Kill, county Galway, was attacked by a party of Terry Alts, well armed, who dragged him out of his house and beat him nearly to death for saying that the Terry Alts were bad fellows.

The house of a poor man named Michael Calnan, near Spring-grove, county Galway, was forcibly entered by a party of Terry Alts, well armed, who dragged him out of his bed and nearly murdered him. On asking why they were beating him, they answered for giving lodging to a man named Lally, whom they considered an informer.

On Wednesday, as James Nevin was serving processes, for the Quarter Sessions of Loughrea, he was waylaid at Spring-grove, in the barony of Longford, by two armed men, who beat him in a most unmerciful manner, leaving him as they supposed dead. They took all the originals from him, first swearing him never to serve a process again.

On Friday night, the dwelling house of John Kerwan, in the parish of Killimore, co. Galway, was forcibly entered by a large party of Terry Alts. They got possession of his gun in prime condition. They then went and broke open his desk and took thereout powder and ball, together with some money.

A man was murdered in the parish of Moore, county Galway, on Tuesday night last—he was commonly called English Jack.

Sunday night a mob of anti-Tythe Payers attacked the house of Peter Daly, Esq. of Corbaly, county Galway, and dashed in the windows with clubs and staves, breaking the frames to pieces. Mr. Daly's driver rescued a blunderbuss from one of the assailants, but all the others made off, and have not since been heard off.

William K. Prendergast, Esq. Bettyville, has received the thanks of the Lord Lieutenant, thro' Sir William Gossett, for assisting the Police to arrest one of the armed ruffians who attacked the house of Mrs. Lynch, at Cartron, county Galway, and carried away the fire arms.

An attempt, by the peasantry, to force the bridewell of Clogheen, and liberate therefrom 28 prisoners committed by Lord Lisimore, was made this week, but it happily failed owing to the resolute conduct of the Magistrates and Police, supported by a military detachment from Caher. One fellow who scaled the walls of the Bridewell was fired at and retreated.

This week a notice was posted on the Chapel of Ballymartle, county Cork, warning the parishioners against paying tythe to the Rev. Mr. Stoyte, the Incumbent.

Monday last, an armed band attacked the house of Lord Kingston's ranger, on the Gaultee mountains, beat him severely, and carried off his fire-arms.

A few nights past only an armed party attacked the house of John Vaughan, near Kanturk, and robbed him of £50, besides a quantity of wearing apparel.

James Meade was this day pilloried in front of the County Court-House, surrounded by a strong guard of horse and foot. He was convicted of perjury at the last Sessions.

Monday night, a son gave his father a terrible gash of a razor, in Bandon-road, Cork. Both were intoxicated, and the subject of dispute was a shilling! The father's recovery is doubtful.

At the Quarter Sessions of Fermoy, on Wednesday, John and William Condon, John and William Roche, were sentenced to 7 years transportation for a barbarous assault upon Jeremiah M'Carthy, at Mitchelstown. The prisoners were of the faction called Luddys, and attacked the prosecutor when coming out of Lord Kingston's Office, because he was related to another faction of the Churchys. The convicts were removed from the dock on their way to Cork.

At the Tralee Sessions on Wednesday, Officers of Health were appointed, and a levy of £400 fixed upon the united parishes. The Barrister sentenced Bartholomew Reidy, and Daniel Connor, the former to two, the other to one month's imprisonment, for assaulting a Police Constable.

Sir Edmund Skottowe, late Mayor, is foreman of the Quarter Sessions Grand Jury of Waterford.

On Sunday last, at the several Masses in Clonmel Chapel, a tribute of £160 was raised for Mr. O'Connell.

Towards building the Chapel of Moykarky, county Tipperary, Sir Henry R. Carden has contributed £8, the Rev. William Armstrong, of Mealiffe, £5, and the Rev. Wm. Lloyd, of Holycross, £2.

The warrant from the Lord Lieutenant for appointing a Board of Health in Ennis has been received. The town was perambulated, and worse scenes of misery and filth were never witnessed.

The Magistrates of Cork, on Wednesday, convicted in a penalty, Mr. Thomas Flynn, for buying corn in a place not being the legal market.

The Treasurer of the Fever Hospital, Poole Gabbett, Esq. acknowledges the receipt of £5 to the above Institution, as a donation from the Hon. Colonel Fitz-Gibbon, M. P.

Doctor Knight Carey has handed W. Piercy, Esq. Treasurer to the Limerick General Dispensary, £1. from J. G. Esq. This invaluable Institution must close its doors against suffering Humanity if not forthwith supported by the Public, its funds being exhausted and Debts accumulating. This Institution having the gratuitous attendance of all the Senior and Junior Physicians and Surgeons of this City, has a paramount claim to any asylum for public support. By prompt assistance disease is arrested and prevented from extending to the different grades in Society. Thousands of lives are preserved at a trifling expense, and their offspring prevented from being a burthen on the Public.

guilty of absolute uncanonical irregularity.

My dear Sir,
very truly yours,
JOHN LIMERICK.

To be read to Mr. HOARE.—“Mr. Hoare is never to preach extempore or without notes; he must always be able to show each sermon exactly as it was preached from the pulpit. On failing in this respect, his license is to be withdrawn.”

I read this letter to Mr. Hoare, in presence of Mr. Fitzgibbon: at which time, he accepted the curacy, under the conditions therein specified, and afterwards took, and subscribed, the oath of Canonical obedience.

About July, 1831, Mr. Hoare began to depart from the observance of those conditions. On my remonstrating with him, he assured me that he had misapprehended the Bishop's meaning, and conceived they were but temporary,—intended only for the present. I corrected his misapprehension, as I thought; and did hope that, in future, he would adhere to the Bishop's direction. In this hope, however, I was mistaken. If Mr. Hoare has said, that, in the conversation he had with me, he did not give me explicitly to understand that he would observe those conditions, if he had any mental reservation, all I shall say is, I wish he had been more candid. I should then have known what course to take. Subsequently, it is true, on receiving from me an official letter, containing a transcript of his Lordship's order, he did, in a measure, submit to it. And, as it had been previously arranged between him and Mr. Fitzgibbon, that he was to give up the curacy in November, he might have retired from the Diocese without any public mark of his Diocesan's disapprobation. His license would not have been formally retracted. But when he, a clergyman of the established Church, with a curate's license still in his possession, (for he had not, in strict form, resigned his curacy), publicly proposed, and deliberately persisted in his purpose, to open an unauthorized Chapel, in opposition both to canon and statute law, and disregard of Episcopal authority, which he was solemnly bound to obey,—it was then, and not till then, that the Bishop resolved to inhibit him.

This will appear from the annexed extract. It is the very last communication I have had from his Lordship on the subject.

Leamington, December 26, 1831.

My dear Dr. Forster,
Mr. Hoare's license must be, at once, withdrawn; and this you are hereby authorized and required to do; and to notice my Clergy, that Mr. Hoare's license having ceased to exist, they are not to allow of his officiating, either in their Reading Desks, Pulpits, or in any other way in their Churches or Parishes.

Ever, my dear Doctor Forster, most faithfully yours,
JOHN LIMERICK.
