

Thursday night, about eight o'clock, a shocking casualty occurred near Cunnigar, in the South Liberties, arising from the too general and fatal practice of country-people laying dry flax up in the thatched roof of their cottages, and frequently within reach of the hand. The Police party from Cunnigar were on patrol, when they heard the crackling of flames and distinctly saw a blaze spring from a little hamlet at 100 yards distance. They hurried to the scene of conflagration, and forced the door open, but the cloud of smoke and flame which burst forth drove them back. In a second attempt they fortunately succeeded in rescuing from the fiery element, Darby Leary, the proprietor, and his eldest son and daughter, who were nearly insensible. The flames now seized the whole tenement, and dreadful to say, Leary's wife and her infant children (twins) perished in the conflagration, spite of every exertion from the Police and country people. In about fifteen minutes after the first three lives were saved, the Police were enabled, amidst the burning ruins, to reach the bed of the mother, where they found her a corpse lying on her face and hands, and the infants (dead) under her, as if in a last fond but hopeless effort to preserve them from destruction. This calamity was caused by lighting a candle, which communicated with the flax, and before the terrified inmates could procure an outlet, so combustible were the materials, that the whole cottage was in a blaze.

The remains of the Rev. John Fitz-Gibbon, Vicar of St. John's, were interred on Thursday morning, in the Church-yard of that parish. The service was read by Archdeacon Maunsell, and the Vicar-General, Dean, and all the Clergy attended in canonicals.

We are authorized to correct an article which appeared in the Chronicle of the 11th instant, and which we extracted from a Dublin Paper, namely, that there is no Church in the Parish of Emly: and to assert on the same authority, that a new and beautiful Cathedral has been erected on the old site within these six years, at the expense of £2500 out of the Economy Funds of the Dean and Chapter without levying one shilling upon the lauds, and without loan or grant from any public body.

On the night of Thursday, an armed party, five in number, attacked a Shepherd named Joyce, residing in the Castle of Drivarsna, near Ardrahan, the property of Mr. Lahiff, of Gort. It was at the request of the Magistrates in the vicinity of Listowel that a military force was ordered to that district.—There is no truth in a report of the Knight of Kerry's mansion at Ballinruddery having been burnt by the Hurlers, who were expected to enter Listowel in a large body.
