On Saturday, the 90th Regiment of Light Infantry, at present in our garrison, was inspected by Major General Macdonnell. The gallant corps went through their several evolutions in the most beautiful style; after which, Major General Macdonnell requested the Lieutenant-Colonel to express to the corps the great satisfaction he had derived at inspecting the Regiment, for the interior economy and system could not fail to meet his most full approbation, and the celerity and precision with which the movements were executed, and the steadiness of the men under arms, were such as reflect the greatest credit on the corps.—Belfast Paper.

The King has intimated to the Authorities at the Horse-Guards, his will, that some means shall be found for promoting Subaltern Officers who have served at least seventeen years on full-pay, (in the respective ranks of Ensign and Lieutenant) and of this ten must have been service abroad. This truly kind act on the part of our good King is only fair, as Officers who have served that period are much longer in the service than many of the Field Officers and MOST of the CAPTAINS who are at present serving, and many of whom have never been out of the country.

We stated in our last that the natives of the Mauritius had thrown off the British dominion.
