DEATHS.

Wednesday, in Ennis, of brain fever, to the affliction of her family, and the regret of her friends, Miss Anna Banks, daughter of Dr. Banks, of Rosebank, near that town.— Amidst the mortality attendant on this season, obdurate must be the heart which can view unmoved their fellow-mortals dropping around them like leaves in wintry weather; but when we see the young and lovely hurried to "the land where all things are forgotten;" when we witness the unexpected blight of what gave fair promise of a rich and abundant harvest of all that is held estimable amongst men, the mournful condition of our being is brought home to us with overwhelming force, and we are compelled to admit the truth of the inspired Psalmist's declaration, "as for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth: for the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place the thereof shall know it no more." These reflections have been suggested to us by the decease of the eldest daughter of Doctor Banks, of Ennis. If youth and gentleness; if worth and accomplishments render human nature dear in the estimation of the world, Miss Banks had strong claims on the affection of society, and her premature removal from amongst us must excite in the breasts of the reflecting, deep and unfeigned regret; what then must be the feelings of those with whom she had lived on terms of closest intimacy? What the agonizing distress of those relatives whom she has left "sorrowing in this world of tears?" Human wisdom, mortal sympathy can afford no alleviation of their affliction, but the conviction that she has but departed "to another country even an heavenly:" the knowledge that she rested her ground of acceptance solely on the finished redemption of her Saviour may deprive death of its extreme bitterness, and enable her afflicted friends to look forward to a reunion in that land where "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."
