LINES

On the death of Lieutenant Richard Maunsell Waller, R. N.

How faint! how feeble is the poet's art!
When manly vigour meets an early grave,
To paint the grief that rends each sorrowing heart,
Lamenting one should fall—so generous! so brave!

A youth more gallant ne'er at danger smiled,
Beneath Britannia's standard ne'er did roam.
A heart that e'er was gentle, frank and mild,
Endeared thee unto all, who sought thy happy home.

How changed the scene, within thy festive hall!
Where happiness illumed each smiling face.
Instead of revelry—the gloomy pall,
And Death's relentless havoc can we trace!

Departed spirit of mine honored friend!
No epitaph thy virtues can pourtray:
While o'er thy tomb in speechless woe we bend,
Affection's tear shall tell what language cannot say!
