

Mr. F. Healy, of Mogullane, Mr. J. Healy, of Nenagh, Mr. Hall, of Kildare, Mr. O'Hara, of Galway, and Mr. Blake, of Mayo.

John Reynolds, who had been drinking at a public-house in Old Clare-street, on Saturday evening, died soon after getting home, under circumstances which gave currency to a report of his being poisoned. The Mayor held an inquest yesterday on his remains, when it appeared the unfortunate man's death was accelerated by the action of that poison which destroyed body and soul—spirituous liquor.

Denis Quilligan, a boatman, was drowned on Monday last, by falling out of a sail boat laden with turf, below the Poole. His body is not found.

The Whiteboys have commenced operations in Westmeath; twelve of these gentry in white shirts and hats having last week burst into a farm house near Athlone, and ordered the inmates to quit under pain of death.

On Monday night a large party of men visited the lands of Killegany, Wexford. They entered three houses, in which were keepers on goods distrained for rent, the tenants being heavily in arrear, and beat the keepers in a cruel and brutal manner.

Sunday evening, about half-past eight o'clock, the houses and barns of Mr. Maurice Davin and Richard Reddy, at Deerpark, County Tipperary, near Carrick-on-Suir, all thatched, were burned in a very short time, together with about sixty barrels of corn, about ten tons of straw, and several cocks of hay. It was with difficulty that Mrs. Davin saved three of her children who were in bed at the time. On the same night, in the same neighbourhood, the house of Mr. Michael Wall, of Mainstown, was forcibly entered by several armed men who beat the inmates, and robbed the house of £90 in cash, and of a gun and a case of pistols.

Three ricks of hay, the property of the Rev. Henry Lucas St. George, Rector of Dromore, were maliciously burned on the night of Wednesday last.

On Tuesday, five prisoners from the fair of Turloughmore, were lodged in Galway Gaol, charged with the murder of a man named M'Namara, on his coming from the fair held at the above village on Monday.

The remains of Mr. William Magrath, late of Castle Hyde, near New Ross, arrived in that town on Sunday evening. His body was found, on Monday week, in the river Barrow, between Bagnal's-town and the Royal Oak; from the state of which, at the time, and being so far from where he resided, it was difficult to identify it. Yet it was evident he had been first murdered, and then thrown into the river. A coroner's inquest was held, and a verdict had of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown. Subsequent circumstances, however, led to the arrest of Walter Magrath, his eldest brother, and two others, on suspicion of being connected in this brutal deed; an investigation was gone into before the magistrates at Borris, when, horrid to contemplate, this monster, with the others, named Aylward, (father and son,) were fully committed to Carlow to take their trial at the next assizes. It seems there had been a jealousy and constant bickerings between the brothers since the death of their father, connected with property at Castle Hyde, the younger brother having been left in possession, the elder having received his portion previous to his father's death. Saturday previous to the murder, a letter arrived by a countryman, purporting to be from a young woman who lives near Bagnalstown, and to whom the deceased had been recently paying his addresses, requesting him to come up immediately, as she intended going off with, and getting married to him, and that if so, he would be sure of her fortune, £200. The deceased set off with the messenger, meantime, the brother by whom the letter was concocted, hastened after his unfortunate victim, the deceased not suspecting anything had something to do with them after which, he was told by Aylward that the young woman would see him at a certain lonely spot on the Barrow, where he repaired, and was there cruelly murdered, his own brother first knocking him down and strangling him with a handkerchief, while one of the hired assassins held his legs, and the other hammered him with stones on the head. They were above ten minutes dispatching their victim, when they carried his mangled corpse, and threw it into a deep part of the river, where it remained covered with sedge and weeds, till it was discovered on the 18th inst. by some country people. One of the wretches, Aylward, has turned approver.

This day, Mr. Coffey's public car which runs hence to Tipperary, was seized under execution for tythes claimed by the Rev. G. Madder.

Lord Morpeth has conveyed to Mr. Kirwan, a Magistrate, the Lord Lieutenant's disapproval of the expressions used by him on the Tuam Sessions bench, that the Protestant Clergymen brought the Rev. Mr. Nolan to that town to cause a riot!

The Royal Yacht Club of England is not dissolved, nor is it likely, as their funds are in a flourishing condition.

A meeting to extend the line of the Central Irish Railway Company, from Galway to Athlone, took place this day at the former place, the survey having been completed from Dublin to Athlone.

The Irish Fishery Company commence next month erecting the necessary stores &c. at their fishing station, Innis-buffin Island, adjoining the Galway and Mayo coasts. They want a fleet of fishing smacks of 40 to 50 tons each.

A valuable vein of copper ore, found on the estate in Cork, of Mr. J. Cummins, of the house of Jourdan and Shaw, London, is now in profitable operation.

The lead mines of John M'Donnell, Esq. of Newhall, Ennis, which are extensively impregnated with silver, will soon be at work, with the aid of machinery.

From ten to twelve cargoes of lead ore from the valuable mine of Hugh Singleton, Esq. have been shipped from Clare river since last January for the English market, and the vein is one of the richest known in this country.

The Royal College of Surgeons, Dublin, elect a Professor on the 24th next month.

An Iron Steam Vessel, capable of carrying 300 passengers, and drawing only 30 inches of water, will very soon run between Cork and Cove. Her speed is calculated at 15 miles an hour, and would consequently make the trip to Cove in 40 minutes.

No insurance will now be made on vessels, timber laden, from America, which may carry deck loads.

Lord Sherborn's freehold estates in Meath and Westmeath are to be sold by auction.

Lord Hawarden is stated to be 74 in advance of Lord Lismore for the vacant Representative Peerage. Total qualified to vote, 149 Peers. Lord Charleville withdrew, but will be elected next vacancy.

Since the Fair Trader coach discontinued running between this City and Ennis last week, the fares of Mr. Bourne's coach on that line have advanced.

Two young men were drowned on Saturday near Dungarvan, by the swamping of a boat laden with manure.

As Mrs. Kelly, of Ballyneeta, was proceeding from Chapel in her jaunting-car, towards her residence near Dungarvan, on Sunday last, the horse became restive and overturned the car. The unfortunate lady was precipitated on her head and killed on the spot.

To Clonmel gaol there have been 413 committals since last Assizes.

The members of the medical profession in the county Cork feel quite indignant at the clause of the new Grand Jury Act, regarding hospitals or dispensaries rather, which materially affects the privileges of the profession, and the amount of their income. A meeting takes place at Bandon next Thursday upon the subject.

Miss Margaret Mapother, of Kiltewan, Roscommon, left her brother, a priest, £50, for the poor of that parish.

There was a brisk fair at Abbeyfeale on Monday, when fat cows brought £10 to £11; milch ditto, £8 to £9; sheep 30s. to 33s. and pigs came near 40s. per cwt.

There was an indifferent fair at Stonehall on Monday, cattle of poor quality, and few buyers attended.

the Vestris herself might have envied. In due time, and conformably to ancient usage, the fair bride herself was challenged to foot it on the sod, and leading the way with most becoming grace and spirit, was vigorously folloed and supported by the rest of the bridal party.

The festivities concluded in true Hibernian-style by the ancient champion of the Glen darting forth from the crowd and wheeling a shillelagh with the deafening cry "Shawn Thone and the Massys for ever! Who dare say against them?" No recusant appearing, the numerous concourse, after partaking of suitable refreshment, separated with enthusiastic cheers for "their kind landlords and the glory of the Glen."

When we consider the strong Conservative feeling which uniformly pervades this ancient, numerous, and influential Family, the cordial attachment evinced to them on this occasion, gives us great satisfaction, proving as it does, that our Gentry may be unbending in their attachment to Church and State, and still retain their fitting place in the affections of the people, thus leading us to hope that a re-action will soon take place in the minds of our countrymen, emancipating them from the dominion of selfish demagogues, and restoring their landlords to their former position of respected guides and beloved friends—a result which we trust our countrymen's good nature and good sense will soon effect. We honour the Glen of Aherlow Boys for setting the good example. Glory to the Glen!!!

There is just issued from the Press of Dublin, an exceedingly attractive and interesting work in one volume, entitled "Two months at Kilkee," by Mary J. Knott, a member of the Society of Friends, who was a visitor to that favourite region in the summer of last year. The subject matter of this very desirable compilation is perfectly new and original in its present form, which is, if possible, enhanced by various plates in first rate execution, illustrative of the grand and sublime scenery which covers that wild and romantic portion of the western coast. Local objects of interest are faithfully described in this narrative, which affords some useful information upon the character and pursuits of the native population. This little volume is quite a curiosity, and we hope to present our readers an occasional extract from its pages. The annexed relates to the operation of Mr. Deane's diving-bell:—

"The principal agent in accomplishing this remarkable performance is the helmet, which may be best designated as a portable diving-bell, that slips down over the head, and, resting upon the shoulders, projects a little below them, and over the chest and back. It is composed of copper plated over, and without any opening except where the head is admitted; in front are three large lenses, similar to the glasses of the new periscope spectacles—convex outside, and concave within—which assist in showing the objects around. In the back part of the helmet is fixed a round pipe, that branches off into three flat pipes; which pass over the head, and discharge on the face the air from a very powerful air-pump of three barrels, and worked by four men. This always remains on the deck of the small vessel, from which the diver descends by a wooden ladder, or, in deep water, by a rope one, with weights at the bottom to keep it straight. Previously to going down, he is warmly clothed in flannel, besides his ordinary dress; and, over all, a water-tight India rubber dress, with leaden soles, and covers for his hands and arms attached: and thus he is up to the chin. As the water cannot rise into the helmet as long as the air is forced down into it from above, consequently the dress, which is tied round the neck, and covered a part of the way down by the bottom of the helmet, keeps the wearer perfectly dry, and allows the air to escape as it does from the bottom of the common diving-bell. The diver has also a signal-line tied round his waist. The upper end is held by a person on deck; and, by a well-arranged code of signals, given by certain pulls of the line, the diver is able (to use a technical term) to converse with the man above, whose business it is, at short intervals, to enquire how the diver finds himself: and, should the latter not answer at once by the signal, he is immediately pulled up; which is done with great ease and quickness, from the buoyancy of the air in the helmet. This apparatus, exclusive of its own weight of 15lbs. requires two weights of 23lbs. each to be fastened, one on the front and the other on the back, to keep it under water. Besides the other precautions, there is a guide-line tied to the bottom of the ladder, which the diver always holds in his hand, to find his way back after descending. When he discovers any article to be sent up, he signals for a rope, chain, or hook, &c. in order to have it drawn up. The diver was some time before he could discover where the heavy part of the intrinsic cargo lay. He says that he examined ten or twelve acres near to where she went to pieces. This was accomplished by standing on the bottom of the ladder, as the little vessel was rowed about the bay. He watched the ground as he passed over; and at length saw the chain cables, which led to the spot where the metals had sunk in heaps; and the bar iron having fallen upon its ends between the rocks, now stands up in a very frightful manner. He thinks, from the way in which the cargo lies in 66 feet of water, that it fell out at one side of the vessel, that she afterwards rose, and then went to pieces nearer to the shore, where they at first expected to find the cargo. The buoys now float over it, just midway between the Castle Rock and the end of the Diamond Rocks, about a furlong from each, and recall to the mind in a degree, the truly appalling and terrific scene of the wreck. It is somewhat consoling to know, that those dreadful catastrophes do not often occur here, and that in the memory of the oldest person in Kilkee, but one small vessel was wrecked.

"From the great clearness of the water on this coast, the diver says he can see 50 feet distinctly—a much greater distance than he has observed elsewhere. On being asked if any large fish ever molested him, he replied in the negative; although in one place on the coast of England where he was engaged, it abounded with great conger eels, which swam by him perfectly harmless. He always takes down a large knife, to defend himself in case of an attack. After going down a few times in one place, he states that he walks about on the bottom of the sea perfectly at his ease. It should also be mentioned, that one person, generally the patentee, always holds the important pipe, through which the air is pumped down to the diver; and that if any accident should occur to stop the supply, the quantity in the helmet and tube would last five minutes; but I believe not any such has ever happened."

On Thursday, his Grace the Lord Primate held his annual visitation in the Church of St. Mark, Armagh. The Rev. Mortimer O'Sullivan had been appointed to preach the sermon, but was unexpectedly called off to Scotland, on urgent business.

LYING-IN HOSPITAL.—The public attention is called to this humane and very interesting institution, which imparts security and comparative happiness to so many of our suffering fellow-creatures. It appears from the reports of the institution, that nearly 400 patients have been received within the last nine months, over 300 of whom have been relieved from misery and rescued from death, by the skill and attention which this house of mercy has blessed them with—and many of whom, had no charity opened to them a sanctuary where the patient eye of science was continually upon them, would have become the victims of ignorance and want. An institution, which reflects so much honour upon the feelings and understanding of our fellow-citizens, will not, we trust, be neglected in the present depressed state of its funds. Its advocacy we understand, is confided to that unremitting and
