

erally lessened if not ration highly extolled ation in the Chest, &c. rom a Recipe of the late mposed of Vegetables.

ral or pernicious ingreal objections so justly Dentifrices. Its deter-ilate those destructive and the Interstices of will generally preserve incture for the Teeth

o sweeten the Breath, Teeth or Stomach; it properties, and is of that it assists in causing to support the Teeth.
enges, and Children's ly applicable to every ren are liable, and may to Patients of all ages, company each packet.

Pills are particularly ic cough, Difficulty of ive Affections; they are ugh which so frequently the patient of sleep.

op, for Coughs, Colds,
t the Chest, and Hoop-pectorant properties of e combination of the ved Pectoral Remedies.
um, the irritation pro-becocuanha and Hyssop harge from the Mucous ectoration of Phlegm.
ngthening the Voice.—
elaxation of the Urula, tigue, field sports, and udden transition from

ed of Black Currants
n Lactucarium, Hippo, sore throats, attended

Tooth-ache. Cajeput
n, the Oil of Cajeput, tensively and success-
plication for unbroken

together with every such as James's Fever
Anderson's Pills, Mar-
Copaiva, Power's Fox
, &c. &c. may be had at the same price as

arty, Frith, Nenagh;
; J, Shields, Parsons-
December, 21.

devoted to mirth. To all Christmas firesides it cannot fail to be heartily welcome.

FUNERAL OF MRS. BERNARD.

The remains of this estimable Lady were deposited in the family vault of her husband, E. Bernard, Esq. in St. John's Church, Limerick. The service was read in a most solemn and impressive manner by the Vicar, Rev. W. Maunsell, and the Rev. R. Moore, after which the assembled multitude of all orders and various denominations who had crowded into the Church, was addressed with an awakening energy by the Rev. E. G. Car, one of the Ministers of the Episcopal Chapel, who said that this solemn service should not be concluded without addressing a word to his fellow sinners—all have need of a Saviour; God created man in his own image, but man sinned and thus destroyed that image—my fellow sinners look around and ask ourselves what caused all the misery and desolation which we see, and much more that we cannot see—sin—it might be said one little sin, this marks God's abhorrence of sin; and if one sin brought such ruin, desolation, and woe into our world; how many sins have you and you, and I, and all of us committed, and for any one of these we might justly be cast into Hell. Is there then no hope, no remedy; oh yes, my fellow sinners, God loves you in spite of your sins, God has given his Son as a ransom for you. Oh, I tell you, my fellow sinners, that God yearns over each of your souls. Christ said in speaking to such as you, my friends, if any of you being a father, and known to give your children good gifts, how much more will your heavenly father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him. Oh, come to God thro' Christ, and fear not, he will rescue you, and to you, my Roman Catholic fellow sinners, I would say come to Christ, do not imagine that Saints and Angels can do the work which Christ alone has the power to do, that is to save a sinner. I do not stand here to eulogise the dead, but earnestly and affectionately address the living; however, of whose cold remains are before you, I may say, that though she and I differed on some minor and immaterial points, yet when we came to speak of Christ, then there was no difference; when we looked to him as he is, the only and all sufficient Saviour, our hearts and affections were raised above all trifling points peculiar to sect or party; thus I would have you, my Roman Catholic fellow sinners, to cast away all those things which only engender division, strife, and anger, and look to him the holy and the pure one, even Jesus Christ, whom God hath exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour. The Rev. Gentleman concluded with a brief appeal to his Protestant fellow sinners who were living in the midst of Christian ordinances, which they either grossly neglected or but indifferently observed, and in a most eloquent and pathetic manner, full of zeal, fervency and affection, called upon all to consider the shortness and uncertainty of life, and the necessity of coming to him whose blood cleanseth from all sin. And now one word as to the order and decorum observed by this large assembly, amongst whom were many of the higher orders, but much more of the lower classes of Roman Catholics, all evinced a feeling of respect and decorum most creditable and becoming throughout the solemn service, and the subsequent address which seemed to be carried home to the hearts of the hearers, for many were affected even to tears.