John Finn, an inn-keeper at Ballymote, county Sligo, and who voted for Colonel Perceval, was beaten at the fair held on Monday last in so dreadful a manner that he never spoke after, and was released from his sufferings on Thursday morning. He has left a young widow and five infant children. A fine cow in full milk, the property of a poor man on the skirts of the town, and who supports himself and family by selling milk, had a quantity of vitriol poured into her mouth, and she was in a state of such dreadful suffering, that she was brought into town to be killed. The man is a Protestant.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LIMERICK CHRONICLE.
Cork, 15th September.

SIR—Having read a paragraph in your paper, stating that a serious affray had taken place between Soldiers of the 12th and 99th Regts. at Cork, I beg to say that, you have been misinformed as to the particulars connected with it; and as I am sure that you do not wish that misstatements should appear in your valuable Journal, I beg to forward a plain and concise statement of the facts as near as they have been able to be discovered: There appears to have been what soldiers call ill will existing between some of the men of the 12th and 99th, arising out of disputes and intemperate quarrels regarding the loose women who infest the environs of the barracks at Cork, for several days previous to the Sunday evening on which the fracas occurred, and personal conflicts having taken place between individuals of the 12th and 99th, led to some of the 12th, attacking some men of the 99th whom they found in a public house on Sunday evening. Part of the picquets of the different corps, and not the 78th only, were called out; but before they could reach the spot the combatants had separated, and they only secured four men of the 99th, who were severely beaten, and one man of the 12th, who was also much injured about the head. These men are now perfectly convalescent. I beg further to observe, that the arrangements for the march of the 99th to Fermoy, and the Depot of the 12th to Kinsale, were made before the affray took place, and not in consequence of the affray. A Detachment of three of the service companies of the 12th Regiment are still in barracks at Cork.

I am, Sir, your obliged servant,

DEATHS.

On Monday, after a few days illness, at his residence, George-street, to the inexpressible grief of his family, and the sincere regret of his many friends, John T. Piercy, Esq. Alderman and late Mayor of Limerick. As a public officer, and chief magistrate of his native city, the pure spirit of honor and integrity which marked his official career, won the esteem and respect of all classes, as his fellow-citizens regarded in him the high-minded gentleman, and the impartial arbiter in all matters connected with the Mayoralty Office. The courtesy of private life, and the dignity of the proud situation he filled, were so nicely blended in the character of Alderman Piercy, that at the expiration of his magisterial duties, a large fund was quickly collected, and to attest the general opinion of his worth, a superb piece of plate was presented, as a memorial of his public services. But in the family and social circle his excellent qualities were still more fondly appreciated, and there the loss may be truly deemed irreparable, for in none were the relative and endearing duties of father and friend more faithfully personified. His remains will be interred to-morrow, in the family vault, at Munchin's church.

Sunday last, at his house in George's-street, of a short illness induced by cold, taken in visiting a patient at night, not far from town, James F. Carroll, Esq. M.D. a gentleman who for some years past had been at the head of his profession in this city, and enjoyed a deservedly high reputation with the faculty and the public. His character as a physician of most extensive practice, great experience, and acknowledged skill, derived, if possible, a brighter lustre from his gentlemanlike manners and address, while the innate goodness of christianity was apparent in his intercourse with the sick poor, whose infirmities and distress ever found a responsive echo in his bosom. The premature demise of one so justly esteemed, has raised a sensation of profound regret in the public mind. His remains were this morning interred at St. Mary's church-yard, attended by a train of private carriages, and citizens on foot, forming a cortege that extended from George's-street, over the New-bridge, and close to the burial place.
