A melancholy catastrophe occurred on the river, Thursday evening, near Ballystein, where a small boat carrying a lug sail swamped in a squall, and the pilot, John M'Elligott, his apprentice Michael Magrath, with a boy named John Hanrahan, were thrown upon the merciless waves. The two first, after a short but desperate struggle, sunk into the arms of death, but Hanrahan fastening upon an oar, floated towards shore, and was taken up, though with scarce a spark of life. The bodies of M'Elligott, the pilot, and Magrath were found yesterday, and brought home to their distracted relatives in this City. The former has left a wife and children.
