"It is now whispered that Mr. O'Connell covets either of these two offices for his sons Morgan or Maurice, and that a Cabinet Minister to whom the learned gentleman's "wants and wishes" are known, is employed to remove any obstacles that may occur, so as to be able to effect the object. This intrigue does not rest upon slight grounds, for though the Member for Dublin, for sterling reasons, is not himself ambitious for office, he is becoming ambitious about his family, more particularly as "old father time," and the cares of life are making considerable, and visible ravages on his robust frame. In a word, extensive changes are being made, without the possibility of, in the most remote degree, adding to the stability of the Cabinet—Indeed, quite the reverse, for it is admitted that Lord John Russell was the cleverest man in the lot, and his loss they will, in a short time, find irreparable.

"The appointments connected with the retirement of Mr. Judge Johnston are already cast-Mr. Pigot is to be Attorney-General, and Serjeant Currey, the member for Armagh, to be the new Solicitor-General, Mr. Brady having the seat on the Bench. patronage which has fallen into the Whigs for the last four years is enormous, and it is surprising the factious distributions they have made of it.

"The Marquess of Headfort has resumed his attendance upon the Queen, after lending a helping hand to her Majesty's Ministers in Ireland and, of course, keeping his own post in the Royal Household. The moral repute of this Nobleman has not without cause exposed him to the animadversions of the Conservative press, as unfit to hold office near her Majesty's person.
