DRESS BALL .- The Grand Dress Ball in honour of Ier Majesty's marriage, took place on Thursday vening, at the Northumberland-Rooms, Lower Ceciltreet, which were elegantly fitted up for the occasion, rhibiting on the walls the Royal Arms, with a Crown nd the letters V. R., supported on either side by the lational Colours, under which appropriately stood he Arms of the Duke of Wellington, and along the ides were displayed the armorial bearings of the nembers of the Limerick Club. The cornices were rnamented with laurel wreaths, amongst which louquets of flowers were gracefully interwoven. The ntire arrangement was remarkably good, and from he judicious manner in which the ball room was ighted, a very chaste and imposing appearance was roduced. The company began to arrive at 10 o'clock, and dancing commenced at eleven, when it was kept up with great spirit until an early hour in the mornng, when the gay votaries of fashion retired to partake of some excellent refreshments. ind costly dresses of the ladies-though personal attraction on this occasion, required little aid from he modistes of fashion—the dazzling brilliancy of the nilitary uniforms, and the soft and entrancing strains of the music, all contributed to render the scene one of surpassing enjoyment, while the easy and fascinating manners of the Lady Patronesses, the courteous lemeanour and polite attention of the Stewards to the numerous guests, left nothing ungratified in the splendid entertainment. Quadrilles, Valtzes, and Gallopes, were the order of the night, and con-Jucted by Mr. Stack, as Master of the Ceremonies, in the most regular and satisfactory manner. A Quadrille Band was stationed in an orchestre erected in the room, and the very effective Band of the 42d Highlanders, who were gallery, crowned the musical department. The attendance was remarkably good, and 197 cards were delivered at the entrance, where a body of police was

Alexander Sellers a. Captain Black, of the ship

William. In this case the complainant a sailor, applied for his wages and to be released from serving in the vessel on the plea of ill-health. He stated he had suffered much hardship on the voyage, and that they had been short of provisions. Mr. Spaight said the vessel sailed from Glasgow to Honduras, and thence to any port of discharge in Great Britain or Ireland, and until the voyage was completed for which the men had signed articles, and the ship reached her destination so as to earn the freight, the hands were not entitled to receive their wages, or be discharged from the vessel. The sailor produced a medical witness, who proved that he had been in a bad state of health, but not so had as to prevent his finishing the voyage. The case was ruled accordingly, when Sellers made use of some disrespectful language to the Court, for which he was taken into custody.

James Mulcahy v. William Hickey, for assault and abusive language. The plaintiff was about to state his case, when his adversary bawled out lustily " gentlemen he is insane, he's a madman since he broke Father Mathew's pledge, he had to be tied neck and heels and hodded along." (Laughter.) It was useless for Mulcahy to attempt opening his case, as the defendant laid hold of him and continued to vociferate-"I told you, you'd never have a day's luck since you broke the sacred pledge." This scene caused much merriment, but the defendant was bound in two sureties to keep the peace. The Court at its rising was adjourned to that day three weeks, in consequence of the Sessions and Assizes intervening, mistaken, it was with this express stipulation, that ten additional benefices were conferred on the College when the Church Temporalities Act passed. The late Provost, who did so much for College reform, intended adding one new fellowship every year 'till the entire number was filled up. For the payment of these supplementary Fellows, acertain per-centage was to be deducted from the income of the present Fellows. The encreased number of Students requires that this addition should be made to the number of Tutors, for while the number of the former have multiplied many times from what it was in the beginning of the present century; the latter have remained stationary. If the number of Fellowships was augmented to 28, and the income reduced below the average of the livings in the gift of the College— then the statute might be repealed with some safety to the interests of the University.

The Rev. Theobald Mathew arrived in this city last evening, from his mission to Tulla, Ennis and Gort, at which latter place it is computed that 50,000 accepted the Temperance pledge from his hands, after journeying from the most remote parts of Galway, Clare and Mayo, to meet the Rev. gentleman, and such was the irrepressible excitement of the vast crowds this occasion, that one old man was trampled to death. At the house of his brother-in-law in city. William Dunbar, Esq. he was engaged last night and this morning receiving, some hundred persons, and left for Cork, at half-past ten to-day.

The Rev. Mr. Mathew was in Tulla, at the hospitable mansion of the Rev. Mr. Sheehy, and during his stay received I2,000 persons.

Tuesday the Rev. Mr. Mathew arrived in Ennis from Tulla, and after twelve o'clock, accompanied by the Rev. Messrs. Hennessy, Hogan, Furlong, &c. proceeded to a store appointed for administering the pledge. The first party having been admitted, he feelingly depicted the evils of drunkenness, but he was glad to observe, that the people were at length impressed with a sense of the wicked habit. What, he would ask, was the cause of all our domestic evils and all the crimes committed in Ireland? All could be traced to whiskey and the public-house. What was it that made them leave their own fertile fields to cut canals amidst the swamps of Canada What was it exiled the father and the husband, and sent them to drag out a miserable existence in New South Wales? He would answer, intoxicating drink. He thanked God that the stigma was fast fading away; and he hoped that the de was not far distant when Ireland would again take her place among the nations of the earth. He observed that religious and political distinctions have almost entirely disappeared, and that henceforward the question will not be "What is your religion," but "what is your conduct." He would advise them to entertain no bad feelings towards brewers or publicans; they would not be so, were they not encouraged by them-They will be obliged to convert those concerns to some more useful purposes, and he would feel no hesitation in saying that instead of considering themselves aggrieved, they will bless the day that they were forced to give up their unhallowed calling. The Rev. Gentleman then proceeded to administer the pledge, and up to five o'clock crowds continued increasing, when it was deemed advisable to leave off until next morning. It is calculated that the number who have taken the pledge on Tuesday and Wednesannot be less than 20,000 At Thurles some of the Catholic proprietors are enforcing the payment of Tithes or Rent-charge, whilst most of the Protestant landlords in the neighbourhood are receiving their rents, and giving the usual receipts without a question as to Tithes.

However, the Conservatives were not found wanting in their duty, for they assembled at the Carlton Club in the evening, and celebrated the Royal Nuptials in their way, which proved if such a thing were ever for an instant doubted by your lip-loyalty men, that her Majesty has not in her dominions more devoted subjects than those ranged under the banners of the Conservative leaders. The Duke of Wellington was invited to the Royal banquet at Buckingham Palace, but declined, and joined in the dinner party at the Carlton, where Sir Robert Peel presided, and where an evening of rare enjoyment was spent.

The late hour at which the interview took place prevents me from furnishing you with a sketch, which you shall have in my next; but of this I can tell you, that the Chancellor listened patiently to the statements made, and if a remedy be not applied, a closer look out will be kept after the Scotch Distillers, otherwise the Irish Distillers will not be able to compete with success with them in .... ___.

In the window of a house in Clonmel, on Monday evening last, the proprietor exhibited a full length likeness of Father Mathew, as a transparency, and in another window was a large bust of the Madonna and Child. In the city of Londonderry on the Queen's nuptial day, a party with green and white knots, made a sally towards Butchers'-gate bearing a large green and white flag, with the Virgin Mary on one side, and Daniel O'Connell on the other.
