DEATHS.

Brindley, Esq.

In Dublin, aged 24, after a short illness, James M'Mahon, Esq, late of Newmarket-on-Fergus. Amiable manners, a gentlemanlike deportment, and the most affectionate disposition, rendered him the idol of his family and relatives, and a highly-valued favonte among a widely extended circle of friends. Superior talents, most assiduously and perseveringly cultivated in the pursuit of medical studies, which he had just completed, were likely to advance him to great eminence in the profession; but Providence, " in the wisdom of his ways," has consigned him to a premature grave, leaving those who deplore him only one consolation in their bereavement, that he met death with a heroic fortitude, a religious resignation, which youth, and hope, and flattering prospects are not, in the weakness of human nature, always calculated to inspire. He was nephew of the late Bishop O'Shaughnessy.

Yesterday, at the North Strand, of fever, Mr. Joseph A. Bradshaw-a young gentleman whose obliging manners, and upright principles, endeared him to relatives and friends.
