Court-house; saw six persons there, all of whom went over to the wall immediately opposite, and threw the top wall-stone off; Mr. John M'Kay, Mr. George Davoren, Mr. Charles Waring, Ensign Lynch, Mr. Roger Waller, and a person who I now identify as Mr. George Waller, were the party; they had no implements, but pushed the stone off with their hands; on subsequent examination I found the hinge of the Session-house door broken and the bolt shot back.

Mr. Powell—What do you mean by saying "a person whom you now identify as Mr. George Waller?"

Constable Lynch—Because at the time of swearing my information I believed the gentleman's name to be Dwyer; but when I saw Mr. Dwyer on serving a summons, I said "If that's Mr. Dwyer, he's not the man."

To the Earl of Clare.—'Twas before I served Mr. Dwyer with the summons I said he was not the man; I am sure I make no mistake in now swearing it was Mr. George Waller.

Mr. Worrall—Have you any more to state?

Constable Lynch—Yes. When I went out to them, they were silent, and they put their backs to the wall; I said, "We have ye at last." I also observed it was a sore job, upon which Ensign Lynch came up to me, saying "I'll be away two hundred miles in the morning, and if you do anything, I'll break you all." I expressed my intention of arresting him, in consequence of what he said, and some of his party endeavoured to prevent me taking him; he wanted to draw his sword on me; Mr. Waring offered to keep him, but I would not let him go; he handed his sword to Mr. Waring, and was then taken before Mr. Tracy.

Cross-examined by Mr. Worrall.—With the exception of Mr. George Waller, I knew all the rest perfectly; some refused to go to Mr. Tracy, and some did not; I did not mind arresting the others, as I knew them, and where to find them; went to bed that night about 9 o'clock, quite sober; I now swear Mr. George Waller is the person that I took to be Mr. Dwyer.

Sub-Constable Fennessy corroborated the testimony of Constable Lynch, and identified the accused.

Sub-Constable Timons deposed to having heard shots fired outside his house, and music, in consequence of which he called up Constable Lynch, and his party, between four and five o'clock, on the morning of the 27th. The rest of his testimony was corroborative of the preceding witnesses.

To Mr. Worrall.—The damage was the pushing off the top stone of the gate pier; it is reputed public property; will not swear Mr. Watson didn't build the pier at his own expense.

One of the Magistrates said he understood Counsellor Watson was summoned to give evidence respecting the erection of the wall. The Counsellor said the injury was done to part of the recess, but could not take upon himself to swear it was a presentable wall; it was his father built the approaches, and would be able to inform them on the subject.

The case for the prosecution closed, and Mr. Worrall submitted there was no evidence adduced to warrant the Bench in convicting his clients, it not being proved the part of the wall injured was presentable. He would give evidence of the intrinsic value of the injury done.

Mr. Powell.—The presumption is that it is a presentable wall.

Mr. Worrall.—But presumption will not do. The prosecution is for a penalty; the evidence is clear and distinct; I hold it is indispensable to show it is a presentable wall. If the Police here wished to substantiate their case, they could have had recourse to the records of the county, and make themselves sure on this head.

James Ryan, a builder, was sworn, and deposed he would repair the damage done for 2s.

Andrew James Watson, Esq. sworn—I know where the damage complained of was done; the stone knocked off was a top hammered pier stone; I built that part of it at my own expense; I built the walls at both sides under a presentment, but that part of it was exempt from presentment in the measurement of Mr. Walker, the County Surveyor; the erection of the wall cost me £20 more than I got for it; the wall began at the well, and terminated at the boat slip.

Mr. Powell was of opinion Mr. Walker had no right to exempt any part of the wall from measurement, the contract for its erection being from one point to another; and though it was Mr. Watson erected the wall he was of opinion it was public property. How often did it occur that gentlemen had got nominal presentments to erect walls, and erect footpaths at their own expense, in order to improve their own premises, yet such could not be considered anything but public property.

Mr. Worrall again contended that in the absence of evidence that part of the wall injured was presentable, the case should be dismissed.

The Magistrates on consultation intimated the case not being supported, was dismissed.

SECOND CHARGE.

This was of a more serious character than the former, the charge being "for breaking open the Court-house, taking therefrom two books or office records, and throwing them into the river."

Matthew Ryan sworn.—On the morning of the 27th of September saw the Court-house door breaking open by these gentlemen, between day and dark; was awoke by the firing of shots, and the breaking in of Mr. Madden's window; was going to call the police when passing the Court-house; I did not go on when I saw them, as I was frightened at what happened at Madden's; heard shots firing all night; when I saw them at the Court-house I ran back to call another man; when I came up the second time, the Court-house was open and the police inside; I saw the two Mr. Waller's there, but did not see them forcing the door; Mr. Roger Waller was standing on the road, and Mr. George Waller below him; saw the other four forcing in the door.

To General Bourke—Can't say they were armed, but heard the shots while in bed; was present when the police examined the Court-house, and saw the hinges off the door; saw books floating in the river near Cluan's well; brought out one of them, and gave it to Mr. Hall, the Petty Sessions Clerk; didn't hear the gentleman say anything about the books.

Cross-examined by Mr. Worrall—Had not plenty of light to see the gentlemen that morning, but enough to enable him to recognise them; it was nearing day, and they were about 20 yards from him; saw Mr. George Waller had a cloak on; knew Mr. Lynch; he wore a military cap, and an oil-cloth cape; can't swear the Court-house door was locked; swears positively it was after Madden's windows were broken that he saw them forcing the door of the Court-house.

John Hegany, sworn—Recollects the morning of the 27th; saw the six gentlemen accused forcing the Court-house door; they did force it; saw Mr. Roger Waller bring something out in his hand, and throw it into the river; saw a second person come out and throw something into the river; knows Madden's windows were broken; heard shots firing, but can't tell who fired them; saw none of the gentlemen having arms.

Cross-examined—Was burning a lime-kiln that morning; the kiln is 30 perches from the Sessions-
