We have seen the very handsome medallions and resolutions unanimously awarded by the last General Court of the Royal Humane Society to Messrs. James and Joseph Wickham, of Madeboy, in testimony of "the most lively admiration of the noble courage and humanity displayed by them, in jumping into the river Mulcair, to the relief of Judith Magrath, whose life they providentially saved on the 10th day of May, 1840;" and while we congratulate those young gentlemen on so honorable a testimonial to their humane intrepidity, we cannot avoid expressing our regret that the attention of Government has not been called to their gallant conduct on that perilous occasion, when we daily witness the appointment to the Police and other services, of persons whose claims cannot compete with the merits of those enterprising and intelligent young men.
