DEATHS.

On the 12th inst. at Belville, near Newcastle, aged 76, Thomas Furlong, Esq. He had been for many years an intelligent and upright Magistrate of this county, and was much respected by all who knew him.
On Sunday morning last, at Newcastle, in this county, universally and deservedly regretted, in the 67th year of his age, Denis M'Carthy, Esq. M.D. In the painful task which so frequently devolves of recording the deaths of those who have endeared themselves to society by their virtues, or directed their talents to the benefit of the community, we have seldom had occasion to notice one who was more fully entitled to be thus classed—not only his own family, but a widely extended circle of friends, will long feel the loss of a gentleman whose heart was warmed by the sincerest benevolence, and who, for many years, devoted his experience and medical skill to the relief of the unfortunate and the distressed. The sorrow which his numerous relatives and friends naturally feel upon this melancholy occasion is, however, considerably softened by the reflection, that he departed this life in the fullness of time, as well as the remembrance, that from his youth, he preserved a character for the strictest honor and integrity. His remains were interred yesterday in the family vault, at Kilmeeady, followed by as large and respectable a concourse of persons as ever attended on a similar occasion in that part of the country.
