DEATHS

At five o'clock, on Wednesday evening, at the house of her son, Samuel Watson, of Leeson-street, Dublin, Esq. Barrister-at-Law, Mrs. Watson, the lady of A. J. Watson, late of Castleconnell, Esq. The demise of this amiable and most estimable woman is, indeed, a sad bereavement to her afflicted family and sorrowing relatives. Her merits and character cannot be properly portrayed within the scanty limits of an obituary. With a vigorous intellect, she united all the gentler virtues, and was ever distinguished for the exemplary performance of every moral, social, and conjugal and maternal duty. To her friends she was endeared by her bland manners and benevolent disposition. The equanimity of her temper was only equalled by her touching sympathy; anger, and apathy were alien to her nature. With saintly piety and philosophic patience, she bore a painful and protracted illness, and departed this life with the calm resignation and fervid hope of a faithful Christian. Long will she be mourned and remembered; but her disconsolate family and friends may, however, be consoled by the conviction, that her virtues will be rewarded with an eternal felicity.
