appeals at Cork assizes. Application being made for costs, his Lordship said this involved a very serious question, as to the right of giving fees of Counsel on appeals. The Quarter Sessions Courts were the creatures of statute, enacted for enabling the poorer class of people to decide their claims, and the statute provided for the costs chargeable. He had consulted with the Chief Baron on the subject, and his opinion was against giving such costs.

A GOOD LANDLORD.—It must be in the recollection of the readers of the Chronicle, that the Earl Dunraven became the purchaser of a portion of the Charleville estate some two years since. The noble Lord did not, however, become the actual owner, until were the fears and hopes of those who were destined to become his lordship's tenants. Thursday last, the landholders on the townlands of Ballycasey and Ashgrova, who every the lordship. Those persons were hearly three gales in arrear, twing to the twint of final settlement between the pure aser and saller. His Lordship, however, only demanded one gale, and sought neither note persons garging for the other participants. nor security for the enhanced by the excee other portion,-a boon much ding kind treatment the tenants received at Adare Castle Immediately after the rents were settled, a sumptuous dinner was served up to them of good beef and mutton, beer and porter; and the Earl and Countess must have been highly pleased at beholding the gratification expressed by their new tenants. Dinner over, the Castle, and all its beauties, were shewn to the rustic visitors; nor did this grateful party separate till six in the evening.— Kindly feelings of this nature cannot be too generally cultivated between landlord and tenant. On their return home to celebrate this joyous event, a large bonfire was made, round which groups of the happy peasantry danced, until morning. - BY A GRATE-FUL TENANT.
