There are 34 clerks employed by the Poor Law Commissioners in Ireland, of which number half is English, with salaries nearly double the other moiety.

We announced a few posts since a case of hydrophobia at Kilrush which prove fatal to a poor lad, one of the family who was bitten by a rabid dog. The Earl of Arundel and Surrey on reading this, wrote to Dr. Foley, of Kilrush, under whose care the patient was, to ascertain the facts of the case, and on finding that five more of the family were bitten, he sent by return of post a cure for the disease, which had been effectually tried in Germany, as also in Hyde-park barracks, and requesting to be informed how the family were getting on.

Doctor Foley wrote him accordingly to say that the family were doing well; but that a horse, which was also bitten, had died. The noble Earl, with that philanthropy which is so characteristic of his noble and ancient race, sent a bank order for £20 to buy a horse for this poor man—requesting that Doctor F. should write every day to say if the family were improving, and that any expenses incurred he would cheerfully pay. Such practical benevolence from an utter stranger, deserves honourable record.
