DEATHS.

On Thursday last, at his house, Pembroke-street, Dublin, Major Thomas Goodricke Peacock, of Fort Etna, in this County. Dearly as we prize in this life the high character and genuine worth of a relative or friend, the cold hand of Death, which regards not distinction, can alone make us sensible of the grievous and irreparable loss of the object whose virtues leave behind the best enduring memorial of his name. Such is the impression which will be diffused through this County by the mournful intelligence of the demise of Thomas Goodricke Peacock, who, if we consider him in the station of an officer, a private gentleman, a magistrate, or landlord, won the esteem and admiration of all classes, without any effort beyond the easy and natural exercise of those excellent qualities of the head and heart, which confer more true honor and happiness than any earthly gift or possession, apart therefrom. He died the death of the righteous in peace and love to mankind, with humble yet confident hope of salvation through the atoning blood of his Creator and Redeemer.
