

REPEAL IS REVOLUTION!

and something more too, if not worse. "It's not for all that," as Robert Burns said, and in fact, the fearful fact is more obvious, at every day. The "county," or market meeting on Monday, was divested of that usual common-place Repeal, by the startling doctrine authoritatively proclaimed to Protestant ears, by a learned dignitary of the name of Rome, who is unquestionably a man of great talent, both as a scholar and divine. The Catholic Archdeacon of Limerick is not unknown to literary fame, and the words of Dr. Fitzgibbon on the above occasion must be of momentous importance, for his own brethren regard him as an oracle of wisdom in polemics if not in politics. The Very Rev. gentleman, not without equality, has now publicly avowed that but long cherished principle of Roman ascendancy. Mark his words.—He felt in seeing the city of the violated treaty achieved and suffered so much in the name of liberty, and "the ancient religion of Rome," represented by two Catholic gentlemen, and not despair of yet seeing the Cathedral of the possession of a Dean of his church, would purify it with holy water!! (loud applause) He could not but rejoice in the hope that the venerable Cathedral of Limerick would revert to its former, and while he would leave to Protestants the "chimes of yesterday" he would claim what was his own. He was sure of this restitution, as that which was in the heavens!" Loud applause crowned these sentiments, if not woeful to Protestants, at least, delightful to his Roman Catholic brethren.

Members of the "forfeited estates" look to your titles and tremble for your titles, and properties, and innocently conceive to be sacred as the Queen's Protestants and Roman Catholics of Ireland, deeply interested in what Archdeacon Fitzgerald has called "restitution," but which we presume you consider as a flagrant spoliation or wholesale robbery. The "writing on the wall" which holy writ tells us would be the fate of a dynasty in the old world, is as portentous at the present crisis. That hopeful Repeal, which the addresses of Daniel O'Connell in the proceedings of the Repeal Society have so long prepared us for, is now openly and avowedly imposed a sacrilegious hand upon Church and State, and confiscates what the law and constitution of a century has reckoned sacred, and inalienable. Can we be so simple as to imagine that the good tenure of Lay property will be maintained in the Act of Settlement, passed by our ancestors, to be a dead letter on the statute book? Can Archdeacon Fitzgerald, in candour and honesty, maintain that lay property is not held upon as good a title in law and justice, as that of ecclesiastics? Can Catholic proprietors, though you now enjoy a portion of the houses and lands in question, you will not admit that no lapse of time, or change of circumstances can destroy the virtue of an original title, or sanction of justice, however remote or obscure. The records or maps of the proprietors of the forfeited estates, you well know, have been transmitted to the Roman Catholic families for more than two centuries, and preserved with religious fidelity by their descendants. Be assured that the anxious hopes of the parties interested were never so sanguine as now, and depend upon it that in the event of the Repeal, which goes to dismember a united empire, nothing will save you in the end from the loss of those long withheld rights. You will be no bar to "restitution" from the right owners! Many of these, be it remembered, are now "hewers of wood and drawers of water," and therefore not less eager and ardent for the restoration of their ancient inheritance! No argument can hold the reckless but straightforward drift of the Repeal agitation, and determine in time with your fellow-subjects, if you will form an honest union in defence of your properties, and your lives.

Daniel O'Connell "in error" when he pronounced this year, 1844, the "clinching" of Repeal agitation?

DEATHS.

On Saturday last, at Kilrush, to the inexpressible sorrow of his family and friends, Henry Lucas, Esq. M.D. The early fate of this most amiable, gentle, and interesting young man, is a source of the most poignant regret to all who knew him. He was the ornament of a profession in which (for the short space that fate allowed him) he was pursuing a successful and honorable career; and, in the charitable discharge of its duties, he fell a victim to fever. He was borne to the grave by his school-fellows—the companions of childhood—who deeply deplore him, and who, long and warmly, shall cherish the memory of as pure, virtuous, and inoffensive a being as ever existed.

At Myrtle Hill Terrace, Harriett, daughter of the late Robert Evory, Esq. of Cork.

At his residence, Mespil Villa, Dublin, Colonel Charles King, K.H. for many years attached to the Staff of the garrison as Inspecting Field Officer.
