

ctors and of the public, for in such undertakings received that the interests of the public and the ctors were identical (hear.) He trusted to secure permanent interests of this company the proposi- for the extension of the line would be readily ed to by the Dublin and Cashel proprietary, even h it might be supposed that they were giving up hing in admitting those other parties to a partici- a in the undertaking.

Charles W. Williams seconded the resolution, and rmly recommended it to the adoption of the pro- rs at large. Whatever difference of opinion might as to the mode in which this extension would be d out, or the terms on which the capital could sed, there was no doubt of the necessity of having hole under one united management (hear.) By means alone they could have unity of action, and a xion of interests, and without these they could not efficiency or economy (hear). Under those stances, he thought there could be no hesitation pting this resolution; when it was passed, the rs would be in a position to proceed with the act iament in the ensuing session, and there was no that they would be able to carry the bill as phantly as they did the last (hear). resolution was put and carried.
