The Company have added, by an advantageous arrangement, 927 policies to their lists, through a transference of the business of the YORK AND LONDON ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The reports and statements were unanimously approved of; and the Chairman, after drawing attention to the important position which the Company now occupy among the Assurance Institutions of this country, continued, "I can state with much confidence that the Standard is now the first Assurance Office in this country as regards the extent of its business connection and its ramification throughout the kingdom; and I feel assured that its extent in this respect, combined with its excellent constitution, and other advantages which it affords, cannot fail to make it, before many years, pre-eminent in other respects also. Indeed, no other office stands in a better position than the Standard, whether the inducements to Assurers are grounded on the sound principles on which it is constituted, the liberality by which its management is distinguished, or the prospects which must certainly be realised in its future progress.

"It may appear at first sight that a large business transacted by an Assurance Office is of little importance to the individual Policy Holder; but such is not the case. A large extent of business is important with reference to Profits, and more particularly as tending to the full development of the results of the Tables on which the Company proceed, by the distribution of the risks over a large number of lives. It is also a matter of great importance as regards the expense at which the business is conducted, for it is evident that if this Company do as much business in one year as other offices do in two, three, or four years, a considerable saving must arise."

The Chairman concluded by congratulating all parties on the satisfactory results exhibited, and took the opportunity of calling attention to the important fact that the THIRD DIVISION of PROFITS among the Policy Holders was to take place in November 1845. He was certain that the advantage of joining the Participation Scheme of the Company before the balance was struck, would not be lost sight of by intending assurers, and he felt confident that there would be much reason for further congratulation when next they met together.

The Management was declared to stand as follows for the ensuing year:—

THIRD DIVISION OF PROFITS.
The Third Investigation of the Company's Affairs, with reference to the approaching Division of Profits, is now in progress; and parties assuring before the close of the lists in November 1845, will participate.
Looking to the prosperous condition of the Company, and the large additions to Policies declared in 1835 and 1840, there are great inducements to parties Assuring to give the Standard a preference.
