

[We are fully sensible of the affectionate zeal of the Apostle of Temperance in the glorious cause which he has preached for the last six years, and of the anxiety he evinced on all occasions to avoid political or sectarian feeling in his missionary labours. We believe there is not a more pure, benevolent, and single-minded advocate of Temperance—a fact of which his recent embarrassments afford no light testimony. Thanking him for his kind acknowledgment of our uniform and sincere support of the Temperance cause, we beg to observe, that no one person in Limerick who saw the flag carried by the Tipperary band in this City ever differed in construction as to the device it bore—a Harp, with the Crown reversed, and at the other side a Harp, without any Crown. Obviously, such was its appearance to every spectator in the streets, and members of the local Temperance Societies since referred to retain the same impression. Still it is possible those who beheld it were mistaken, and we gladly avail of the Rev. Mr. Mathew's explanation of the insignia, assured that he would not tolerate a disrespectful exhibition. To prevent all future misapprehension, let the Crown have its right place—then Loyalty and Temperance will go hand in hand. Thus removing a great obstacle in a very considerable quarter, and speeding forward the triumphant career of industry, sobriety, and morality.—Ed.]
