

evidence we now subjoin, and upon this very untoward night of the 22d and 23d inst. residing on the Clare side of the river, and opposite Friar's Island, (parties of pleasure) was made. As the parties were disturbing his poultry in the house, he saw two or three persons on the river, with some of his family proceeded to the police station, and used their assistance, he went to the assistance of two policemen, Brophy and O'Connell. When they reached the river, they separated themselves apart, close to the river, to see what was in the pot on the fire. Some of the people were sitting round the fire, and one of them took off Gleeson's hat, who was on the river, and over to the mainland, leaving the hat almost immediately after he was fired. He identifies one of the persons as John Ellis, the deceased. Brophy made a statement to the police, and reached Friar's Island with the police, and were stationed so as to guard the bridge on in the ruin, and then there were about fifteen persons on the river, five of them soldiers. When the police called on the party to surrender, they were met by a volley of stones, and towards him, on which he fired. Brophy retreated, overpowered and beaten with the bayonets. Constables made a gallant attack on Brophy, some eight or ten of them, and have been severely wounded. One of the civilians, John Ellis, was killed, and one soldier is wounded in the head; the other three soldiers are uninjured. Callaghan was severely handled, and though he was taken to his bed. The four persons who are men of good character, and the civilians with them, were associated on that occasion on the banks of Killaloe, fishermen and Protestants. The night before the party were assembled over a fire, and of them is as yet identified by the police. Barrone, has been committed to prison on his person, but the police do not recognise him.

Mr. Barrone, Esq. called at Barrington's Hospital, after the unfortunate accident of Sunday night, in the unfurnished state of the hospital, and in the most generous manner he completely fitted out for the assistance of charitable feeling for the highest credit on that point. Mr. Morris, of Rutland-street, also called after due enquiry, directed the hospital to be immediately re-opened, and to take care to have the gas supplied.

Mr. Barrone, Esq. called at Barrington's Hospital, after the receipt of £3 from Timothy O'Hara, Esq. of that invaluable institution, and cannot take a more fitting opportunity to express their public generally for their subscription to the painful duty to state, that after the accident several wards were closed, and without funds to meet the

New Daily Morning

3 THE DUBLIN T

ON WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 5th of
WILL be published THE DUBLIN
Daily Morning Journal of Political
the Fine Arts, Agriculture, &c.

The old landmarks of party—the epitome of Tory—having, if not fallen into disuse, better than empty sounds, the intention could not be adequately indicated by a these symbols—it will be better understood that its object is the maintenance of British connection, the advancement of her true interests, and the independent every political measure, on grounds high of party, and regardless of faction.

Without any wish or intention to existing organs of Protestant opinions the proprietors of this Paper would respect that the great middle classes of Ireland—of her intelligence and ability—are neither in the Press nor in the Parliament: to and to assist in obviating the other main chief end of this Journal.

Men not altogether new in literature their best efforts to its support, and Books, add a new feature of interest to These will be done carefully and imp reference to sect or party, but in a spirit fearless independence.

In conclusion, we ask public support on a narrow ground of ministering to the section in Politics, but on the broad maintaining the advantages of English English liberty, with the furtherance of country's welfare and prosperity.

The large issue of this Paper on the publication will afford a desirable opportunity of insertion of advertisements.
