At Boulogne-sur-Mer, of apoplexy, William James St. John, son of the late Viscount Boliabroke.

From this line, between Cork and Midleton, a branch will diverge to the town of Cove, a distance of about five miles.

The harbour of Cove is the most important naval station in Ireland, and from its position and natural advantages, must always hold a very high rank in a commercial point of view. As a residence during the summer season, Cove has long been celebrated, as the daily concourse of visitors to it and the various places adjacent demonstrates. Even during the winter season the mildness and salubrity of its climate make it invaluable as a place of sojourn to invalids. The traffic in goods and merchandize between Cork and Cove is very great, and must evidently be much increased when assisted by the facility of Railway communication.

At or near Midleton, a branch will diverge to the town of Fermoy, being about seventeen miles in length, thus opening a communication with a rich and populous district, the traffic of which is, by the second report of the Railway Commissioners, stated to be greater than that of any other south of Dublin, and connecting its great commercial and military centre—Fermoy, with the deep water at Cove, while, beyond the Fermoy terminus, the towns of Mitchelstown, Kilworth, and Glanworth, will participate in the advantages of the intercourse.

From the town of Midleton, the line will proceed by Castlemartyr and Killeagh to Youghal, a further distance of about fifteen miles, thereby opening a direct communication with the county of Waterford, and passing through a range of country which possesses many natural advantages. Between this line and the sea coast is a large and populous district (in which is situate the town of Cloyne,) at present dependant upon the roads through Midleton and Cove for intercourse with the city of Cork.

The time which will be necessary for the journeys between the several stations on the line may be thus stated:—From Cork to Youghal or Fermoy, and from either of the two last-mentioned places to the other, or to Cove, will occupy less than one hour; and from Cork to Cove, and from Midleton to each of the other towns on the line, less than half an hour.

The traffic along the various lines has been carefully computed, and the results afford a highly encouraging view of the undertaking.

The surveys and estimates having been entrusted to Sir John Macneil, the utmost reliance may be placed on their accuracy. The estimated cost of the line, including stations, working establishment, &c. will not exceed £10,000 per mile.

The above estimate is calculated for a double line of rails from Cork to Cove and Midleton, and for a single line for the remainder, the works being prepared for a double line.

The traffic ascertained to exist is as follows:—

Passenger traffic, at 1½d per mile, .. .. .	£24,084	6	3
Coach parcels (estimated) .. .. .	1,145	0	0
	£25,229	6	3
Which being doubled for increase by Railway, gives .. .. .	£50,458	12	6
Merchandise, at 2d. per ton per mile, .. .. .	17,724	3	4
Mails, at 9d. per mile, .. .. .	3,724	10	0
Cattle, sheep, and pigs, .. .. .	2,001	13	4
Troops, baggage, &c. .. .. .	2,500	0	0
	£76,408	19	2

From which is to be deducted for working expenses 30 per cent. or .. .. . 22,922 13 9

Leaving a surplus of .. .. . £53,486 5 5

divisible as a profit amongst the shareholders, and allowing a dividend of 10½ per cent. on the Capital.
