DEATHS.

After a few days' illness, on the 2d inst. in Eustace-street, Dublin, Joshua Abell, one of the Society of Friends, (brother of John Abell, Esq. of this City,) universally esteemed and regretted by his relatives and an extensive circle of acquaintances, for his integrity, philanthropy, and unaffected piety.
He was well known to the literary and scientific world as a highly talented man. His writings in defence of the oppressed negro abroad, and infant freedom from slavery at home, required no other comment than that they emanated from an enlightened, benevolent mind.
