

LIMERICK CHRONICLE.

With unaffected pain we record the dangerous illness of Sir Aubrey De Vere, Bart. of Currah Chase, in this county. The Surgeon-General posted down from Dublin on Thursday night, and instantly left this with Robert O'Brien, of Mulcair, Esq. the devoted son-in-law of Sir Aubrey, and found his patient alarmingly ill from obstruction of the bowels. Sir Philip Crampton returned to Limerick early yesterday morning, with but little hope of Sir Aubrey's recovery, and left soon after en route to the metropolis. We regret to learn since that inflammation has set in, and the death of the worthy Baronet is to be apprehended. Sir Aubrey De Vere has long enjoyed the highest name as a resident country gentleman, and not less was the general estimate of his character as a magistrate and a grand juror. In social and domestic intercourse the virtues of his excellent nature were seen in the most amiable light, yet his qualifications as a scholar and a gentleman were adapted for a more expansive scale. Sir Aubrey, early in life, studied books and men, in the closet and in the world. Though not a professed author, those few literary productions he sent to press, fully establish his title to considerable erudition and very elegant taste. Some of his poetry may rank with the best classic pieces in modern English literature. Sir Aubrey De Vere was only son of the late Sir Vere Hunt, who sat in the Irish Parliament, nephew of the late Earl of Limerick, and brother-in-law of Lord Monteagle. His eldest son is Vere De Vere, Esq. late High Sheriff of this county.

We have it from undoubted authority that the following letter was addressed by the Lord Chancellor to W. S. O'Brien, Esq. M.P. on the subject of his accusation against R. E. Phillips, Esq. magistrate of this county:—
Minute of the Lord Chancellor upon the complaint against Mr. Phillips, J.P.

"I have now before me a full note of the evidence of the witnesses on the trial of the action by M'Cormack against Mr. Phillips, with a summary of the judge's charge. The learned judge certifies to me that as the judge who heard the evidence, and had an opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witnesses, he should have found the same verdict had he been a juror in the case. I have attentively perused the evidence now before me, and reconsidered the case, and I do not feel myself called upon to take any further step in the matter.
