

agony, and died at six o'clock on Monday morning—before he died he said "Biddy, take care of my six orphans."

Dr. Thos. Riordan sworn—Was called upon between eight and nine o'clock on Sunday night to see two men who were said to have received gun shot wounds; he first saw the wounded soldier, and then proceeded to the house where Gleeson, (now deceased) was; the man was in great agony; upon examination he found that he had received a gun shot wound on the left side of his abdomen, which passed obliquely across the spine, and came out at the right side; from the appearance of the wound the bullet must have been flattened; when first he saw Gleeson, he pronounced the wound to be mortal, and it proved so; he visited him again at one o'clock in the morning, and found him sinking; he said he had come to the village for tobacco, and was standing near the railings of Davy Carroll's house when he received the shot; he did not say who shot him; I could not say whether it was a bullet discharged from a soldier's musquet, or one of the small balls fired out of the policemen's carbine that wounded Gleeson.

John S. Dwyer, Esq. sworn—I live in Castle-Connell; I recollect Sunday evening last; I was in my own house reading to Mrs. Dwyer, when I heard a bugle sound; Mrs. Dwyer asked "whats that for"? I said for the soldiers to assemble; I went out then, and upon coming to the corner of Dr. Riordan's house I saw eleven of the 88th Regt. with arms, and was told at that moment that a soldier had been killed; I said "88th, halt," which they did; I asked them where they were going, and they answered the assembly had been sounded; their officer, Mr. Maxwell, then got them in charge, and I came up the village towards the Police office; I was told I would be shot if I passed the police office; I went to the police barrack, knocked at the door, said it was a friend, and they replied they would be afraid to open it for fear they'd be murdered; I said they were perfectly safe, and told them not to fire any more; I was joined by Mr. Maxwell, 88th, at the Police-office; I sent a messenger for Mr. Tracy. R.M.; I sent for Dr. Riordan, who examined the wounded soldier in Miss Ahern's house; went for the Priest, and then saw John Gleeson, now deceased; I should say, that before I went to that house, I saw a shot fired by a soldier near the Post-office, a little down from the Police barrack; the shot was fired up the town in the direction of Carroll's house; I made at the soldier, to disarm him, but he got away from me; there was a crowd of people in the village, and great excitement prevailed; I went on towards the old castle, and saw a soldier of the 88th in the streets, armed; I thought to take the gun from him, but he would not give it; I went to Captain Maxwell, and told him of it; he and a Sergeant came with me, and the gun was taken from him; it was loaded, but appeared to have been recently discharged; the soldier that fired the shot had his ammunition pouch slung on his arm; the second soldier had his cross belts on; I swear that the gun taken from the soldier was recently discharged, as I smelt it.

To Mr. O'Donnell, solicitor—I met Mr. Tracy in the streets; there was shouting and confusion in the crowd—there was a drunken fellow going about saying it was a pity to let the Orangemen (meaning the police) kill a Catholic soldier; other expressions were used calculated to excite the mob to attack the Police; Mr. Tracy took the drunken man into custody—the women were particularly active—I heard them say to the soldiers that they were chicken-hearted fellows to let their comrade be killed without revenge.

William Corbett sworn—On Sunday night I was in Castle-Connell; I heard some soldiers calling for "pig-drivers," near the police barrack; I went down to the Island, and upon my return in about an hour the soldiers were still opposite the Police barrack shouting for "pig drivers and number two," meaning the police; I heard the door of the police barrack struck with a stick, and a voice cried out "boulagh"—that is to hit it—I heard a pane of glass broke; stones were thrown and a second window broken; I saw two soldiers stoop for stones, and I told them they would be sorry in the morning for what they were doing; they laid down the stones then; immediately after a volley of stones were thrown, and all the barrack windows broken with a crash; the police came outside the barrack armed, and said "here we are, what do ye want of us"—the soldiers endeavoured to get behind the Police, and the crowd moved in upon them; the Policemen requested the military to go away, and called upon a Sergeant, who was present, to induce them to do so, but his exertions were unavailing; when they closed in tightly on the Police, stones were thrown, and one of the policemen was struck on the head; there was an attempt made to force the police from their position, and they retired into the barrack and fastened the door; from what I saw and heard, I knew the police
